Forty years ago he said, there were few millionaires, and the man with $100,000 was considered wealthy. Now the man with a million is hardly considered among the wealthy. The greater part of these enormous fortunes were made in such industries as were natural monopolies, the railroads and the telegraphs, and to rise of value in city real estate. A large part was due to unearned increments. The remedy for this concentration of wealth, Dr. Ely thought, was to be found in the governmental ownership and operation of such industries as had a natural tendency to become monopolies. Among the advantages which he thought would arise from such a change would be a greater employment of the wage-earner, a greater safety for the public and employees, an easier adaptation of these industries to public uses, and an increased freedom and independence of the employees. Dr. Ely believed the reform a practicable one. He was not in favor of taking any man's property for public uses without recompense to him a just equivalent, but the savings in operating expenses would largely reduce the amount which the government would be called on to expend. In spite of the somewhat uncomfortable accommodation the interest of the audience was well maintained, and several of those present expressed a determination to attend Dr. Ely's lectures at the Summer school during the coming week.

ROBBED A MINE.

Sacks of Rich Ore Stolen by a Hold-up Gang.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, July 29.—The shaft house on the Pike's Peak mine was entered through the roof by thieves about 10 o'clock this morning and several sacks of ore, valued at about $100, were stolen. The men who were in the shaft at the time were kept below by the thieves who threw rocks down the shaft. The thieves used poor judgment in selecting the sacks or the total value of the ore stolen would have been much larger. No trace of either the ore or thieves has been found.

Funeral of Mr. P. C. Helm.

Funeral services for the late P. C. Helm, proprietor of the Alamo hotel, were held at No. 101 North Wahsatch avenue at 10:30 yesterday morning. A large number of representative citizens were in attendance. The services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Kirkwood, assisted by a quartet choir from the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Helm will be greatly missed. He was a man of the strictest honor and integrity, and made friends of all who knew him. His kindly nature, his generosity, his unselfishness, were manifest alike in his business and his social life. He was a genial host for all his guests, regarding them always as friends, and doing all in his power to make them comfortable and minister to their wants in every way. His winning manners, his ready tact, his unfailing courtesy, which was not put on, but sprang from his kind heart, had made him hosts of friends, who sincerely condole with Mrs. Helm in her deep affliction.

What Maori Has to Say.

John Maori, the supposed accomplice of Dan Arata in the murder of Benjamin Lightfoot at Denver, and who is now confined in the county jail in this city, submitted to an interview yesterday. Maori is about 23 years of age, has gray hair and dark eyes, and is heavy set. Maori declares his innocence of any connection with the crime. He says he was sleeping in his room at the time, some forty feet from the scene. He states that Arata had two guns of his own and that he had not given him one. He also says the mob during night in taking Arata. Maori had worked for Arata about four months, but has been sick most of the time and never received a cent for his work.

RICH BOOTY.

Wichita Express Robbers Secure Seventy-five Hundred Dollars.

WICHITA, Kan., July 29.—At 9:30 a telephone message was received at the Pacific Express company's office asking that the wagon be sent to the Wichita creamery on its way to the 10:15 o'clock Rock Island train. Arriving at the creamery the wagon was met by a man, who jumped upon the seat, directed the driver to drive around to the rear. When the wagon entered the alley two other men, presenting revolvers, ordered the driver and messenger to hold up their hands. The latter obeyed and the messenger was then compelled to open the safe which contained silver and currency, about to be shipped south, to the amount of $7,500. The robbers dumped the money into a sack and made good their escape. There is no clue to their identity.

Bold Robberies.

DENVER, July 29.—J. W. Vest, who runs a saloon at Sullivan, on the Ft. Worth railroad, ten miles from here, was robbed of $175 and a gold watch by four men. The robbers entered his place about midnight and after binding and gagging him, searched the premises. Vest had drawn $700 from a bank a few days ago, and the robbers expected to get it, but as he had paid out all but $175, they were disappointed. The men were disposed to kill Vest in order to escape identification, but finally left without injuring him. Vest recognized one of the robbers as George Kistler, who formerly worked at Manhattan Beach. He was arrested this afternoon. The others are still at large.

Another robbery occurred last night at 1317 Seventeenth street, in this city, $45 being secured by the robbers. The victim was Lawrence Starr, who threw the above sum from the bank because of the unsettled condition of affairs, and placed it in a trunk in his room. The theft was committed while he was out. No arrests.

A World's Record Broken.

AUGUSTA, Ga., July 29.—A special to the Chronicle from Macon says Larry Twitchell broke the world's record on a long throw in the presence of two league clubs and Manager Barnie of the Louisville club. He threw one hundred and thirty-five yards, two feet and two inches. Hatfield, his only competitor, threw one hundred and thirty-five yards.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—For Colorado—Fair in north; local showers, followed by clearing weather in south portion; variable winds.

A DROP IN WHEAT.

Chicago Broker Plunges in a Bottomless Pit.

THE SAME OLD STORY AGAIN.

More Banks and Banks Reduced Forces and Lowered Wages—A Run on New York Savings Banks Setting Trouble Feared.

CHICAGO, July 29.—A decidedly panicky feeling prevailed in the wheat pit on the board of trade this morning and within the first hour of trading the price of September wheat dropped to 69½c as the lowest figure, compared with the close of yesterday, the latter being only ¼ above the lowest figure ever touched in the history of the board.

There was no news of importance to cause the decline, but the distrust of the financial situation was intensified. The New York stock market showed enormous heavy declines. New York sent a large selling order in wheat. The New York bank statement was unfavorable, showing a great decline in the amount of deposits for the week.

Partridge was a heavy short seller, there was a feeling that the time had come for liquidation. Some good local houses were letting go their long wheat. On the way down a lot of stop loss orders were announced, increasing the heaviness and, although, wheat seemed entirely deserted by its friends.

Prices showed large fluctuations in a single offer of 10,000 bushels and it was not until the price had reached 69½c that there was any considerable buying. The news that Siam had yielded to the French ultimatum did not appear to have reached the board.

The market opened ragged, with bids and offers in September at anywhere between 70½c and 72½c against 72½c the close yesterday and the price slumped down to 69½c, rebounded to 70c, fluctuated for some time between 69½c and 69¾c, then tumbled again, went like lead to 69½c. Fair buying then stopped the downward movement and carried prices back to 70¾c at 11:15 o'clock.

Corn was remarkably steady in view of the panic in wheat. September opened unchanged at 38c, held as low as 37½c and at 11:15 a.m. was quoted at 38c.

Provisions, especially pork, were neglected up to 11:15 o'clock, only two quotations were made in September pork, September, $9.92½, and $9.95, the latter being the same as the closing price yesterday. September lard, which closed yesterday at $9.32½, opened at $9.30, sold at $9.35, but lost the advance.

Bids were very weak, though the opening was at an advance of 17½c compared with yesterday's close. September started at $7.37½ and without any sign of reaction sold off to $7.15 at 11:15 o'clock. The closing price to-day was $7.20.

The closing quotations were: Wheat, cash, 57½c; August, 57½c; September, 69½c. Corn, lower, cash, 36½c; August, 36½c; September, 38c. Oats, lower, cash, 21c; September, 23½c. Pork, easy, cash, $18.70; August, $18.70; September, $19.50. Lard, easy, cash, $9.40; September, $9.50; October, $9.50. Ribs, easy, cash, $7.10; September, $7.02½; October, $7.35. Rye, dull, 47c. Barley, nominal. Flaxseed, slow, $1.10. Timothy, quiet, $3.50@3.60. Butter, steady. Eggs, quiet. Whisky, $1.12.

THE SAME OLD STORY.

Financial Wreck, Industrial Depression, Commercial Depression.

BANK TROUBLES.

NEW YORK, July 29.—The publication of the intended action of the savings banks and institutions to put into practice the [illegible] limiting them to 10 days notice from depositors of intended withdrawals of money precipitated a run this morning. Some of the banks paid the amounts in full and thus sought to restore confidence. Others required notice, the time ranging from ten to ninety days according to the period specified in the by laws.

The meeting of the presidents at the Immigrant Industrial Savings bank yesterday afternoon was called, said President James McMahon of that bank, to-day, to consider what action would be advisable to relieve the heavy drain that has been made since the present financial depression commenced. Each president was invited to give his experience since the drain began, and what, in his opinion, should be done to stay it. They all agreed that the withdrawal of the deposits was in much greater proportion than the money coming in.

"We cannot do business," said one, "with $50,000 being taken out daily, and only $10,000 being deposited."

President McGenon of the Industrial Savings institution said to-night that the withdrawals at his bank were very heavy during the day and that while no panic was feared, unless some such expedient for preventing an indiscriminate run, as had been agreed upon by the banks was put in force, Monday would witness a withdrawal of deposits such as had seldom been known in New York. To meet such a run the bank would be compelled to sacrifice its securities in mortgages and bonds of all denominations. It was impossible to predict the demoralization in values which might follow.

AT BROOKLYN.

BROOKLYN, July 29.—There is to day a slight run on the Brooklyn Savings ban... About one hundred people are in ... of the savings bank presidents yesterday. Cashier Flandrean said the bank was in good condition and all the depositors who drew their money to day were paid in full.

The Dime Savings bank of Brooklyn and the South Brooklyn Savings bank both put into operation to day the thirty and sixty day rule. The Germania Savings bank of Kings county announces that it will put the same rule into operation. All of the other banks of Kings county will probably do the same.

TRENTON, N. J.

TRENTON, N. J., July 29.—A run commenced this morning on the Trenton Savings bank and at noon about $30,000 was paid out. The bank is one of the strongest in the State, having a clean surplus of $268,000. The money paid out this morning was in new silver dollars just received from the Philadelphia mint. All the Trenton banks are in excellent shape and no suspensions will occur.

WOODSTOCK, ILL.

WOODSTOCK, Ills., July 29.—The Exchange bank of G. E. Hallock & Co., of Nunda, made an assignment this morning naming D. T. Smily, an attorney of this city, as assignee. The liabilities are placed at $[illegible] and the assets $19,[illegible], but it is thought that the bank will not be able to pay more than 25 cents on the dollar.

NEW WHATCOM, WASH.

SEATTLE, Wash., July 29.—A special from New Whatcom says: The Puget Sound Loan, Trust and Banking company's bank closed its doors this morning and posted a notice that owing to the constant withdrawal of deposits and inability to realize upon their securities they had suspended temporarily.

FAC SIMILE, WIS.

FAC SIMILE, Wis., July 29.—The Commercial bank, capital $[illegible], did not open this morning, having been placed in the hands of a receiver. W. C. Allen said, "There are eight runs on other banks, but they are feebly said."

IOWA SAVINGS BANKS.

DAVENPORT, Ia., July 29.—In to morrow's papers the savings banks of Davenport, Rock Island and Moline will give notice that hereafter they will demand sixty days notice before paying out funds.

BARABOO, WIS.

BARABOO, Wis., July 29.—The Savings bank of Baraboo closed its doors to-day, owing to inability to realize on assets.

CHICAGO, ILL.

CHICAGO, July 29.—The South Park bank, a small private concern, failed to-day.

INDIANAPOLIS.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 29.—The Emerson-Moore Desk company, one of the largest manufacturers of the kind in the State, went into the hands of a receiver to-day on complaint of creditors that suit was about to be brought against the firm and that the interests of all parties demanded that a receiver be appointed. Horace McKay was appointed receiver.

WILLIAMS WORKS CLOSED.

WILLIAMS, W. Va., July 29.—Owing to the state of trade the Riverside Steel and Iron works, employing 1000 men, closed to-day indefinitely.

WATHAM WORKS.

WATHAM, Mass., July 29.—All the American Waltham Watch company's foremen were given instructions as to the reduction of their working forces. In some cases there will be a cut down of 50 per cent, and in all there will be few hands thrown out. Of the hands retained a large number will have to work for reduced pay, 15 per cent being cut off in some instances, it is said.

WADING IN BLOOD.

Governor Waite Makes a Preliminary Experiment.

DENVER, July 29.—There was a lively, though rather bloodless, session at the State house to-day, between Governor Waite, acting Secretary Maltby and a Denver reporter on the one side, and a Denver reporter on the other. The afternoon Mr. Gaston, a representative of an evening paper, whose regular beat is the State offices, called upon Governor Waite and asked for the news of the day.

The Governor refused to talk and ordered the representative to leave the room. Gaston refused to do so, and the services of Governor Waite's nephew, Maltby, who has been acting as temporary secretary during the vacation of Mr. Lorenz, being called on, the reporter was ejected.

During the operation of ejecting, the reporter defended himself as well as possible, considering that both the Governor and his nephew were choking and otherwise maltreating him. As a result of the altercation the reporter received several bruises, while Acting Secretary Maltby, who has been brought up at handling the sledge hammer and drill in a mine escaped with a slight scratch.

Governor Waite's face was protected by a heavy growth of whiskers and no marks are visible. The cause of the trouble has been frequent criticisms which the paper represented by Reporter Gaston has seen fit to pass upon the [illegible] Nonsense have been made.

SILVER CONVENTION.

Preparations Making in Chicago for Next Week's Meeting.

CHICAGO, July 29.—In most of the hotel rotundas and lobbies the subject of conversation was silver. The vanguard of delegates is very active, assisting the local committee to get things in shape for the great convention, which is to give expression to the views of the friends of the white metal. This afternoon the local committee and the delegates who had arrived held a meeting at the office at Coin, which is in reception hall.

Invitation and press committees were appointed with the following chairmen: W. H. Harvey, Joel Bigelow, Judge Henry G. Miller and George F. Washburn, but it was decided to hold a mass meeting Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in Central Music Hall, where addresses will be made by leading silver speakers of the country. In the course of the discussion on this subject a motion was made to invite the officers of the labor organizations to the platform on Tuesday night's meeting. The meeting invited the officials of all commercial, financial and economic bodies to occupy seats on the platform.

It was announced that the silver convention proper would open in the main hall of the First Methodist Church, corner Washington and Clark streets, at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. On Wednesday night a great rally on the Lake front will be addressed by General Warner, Senators Jones and Wolcott, Congressmen Bryan of Nebraska, Bland of Missouri, and many other leading free silver men.

Carl Brown, a California delegate, will make an address at the Lake front to-morrow afternoon. Brown is the organizer of the American Industrial league, the free silver society of the West. He made his appearance at the meeting to-day and created some what of a sensation by the dress of tanned buckskin.

Secretary J. B. Brown of the Colorado delegation arrived here to-day. The delegations' headquarters are at the Palmer house. General Warner, president of the [illegible] expects to arrive to-morrow and with his secretaries will open his headquarters at the Grand Pacific hotel.

Congressmen Pence and Bell of Colorado left to-night for Washington. "We should like to remain," said Mr. Pence, "but our presence in Washington next week will be of more service to the silver people than attendance upon the convention."

The convention will forestall any attempt of a comprising element to get a hearing by refusing to admit any one who does not favor the free coinage of silver in the ratio of 16 to 1 with gold.

Congressman Sweet of Idaho, who is at the Grand Pacific, looks for the arrival of the delegation from his State some time to morrow.

Governor Fishback Dying.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 29.—Private Secretary Flippin has been advised from Fort Smith that his chief, Governor Fishback of Arkansas, is dying. The physician in attendance declares it impossible for the Governor to live until night.

People's Bank Case.

DENVER, July 29.—The hearing of M. J. Lawrence, president of the People's Savings bank, and Fred Schrader, cashier, charged with receiving money after they knew the bank was insolvent, was continued until Wednesday by Justice Lebert this morning.

SIAM YIELDS.

No Alternative Left but Unconditional Submission.

FRANCE IS WELL PLEASED.

The Ultimatum Accepted with All Its Rigors, France Accepts the Offer, and the War is Declared Off for the Present.

PARIS, July 29.—The following official statement was given to the press this evening: "The Siamese government has accepted the French ultimatum without reserve. The French conditions of Friday are to be carried out without modification. The Siamese government has complied with the demands of France and all who were not desirous of making the Siamese difficulty the occasion of a colonial enterprise."

After referring to the cabinet meeting to-day and the cabinet meeting called for to-morrow, the statement closes with the single

"The French government desiring to give proofs of its good will to Siam probably will not raise further objections in the affair."

Another semi-official statement denies the truth of the rumor that M. Develle and M. Delcassé, under secretary of state for the colonies, have resigned. The publication of proof in the outcome of the Siamese affair, says the statement, that Great Britain has not interfered and does not intend to do so.

The Echo accepts this last statement only with a grain of salt. It says that something has been done behind the scenes and the French are likely to awaken soon to the fact that Great Britain, after all, has got the better of them in the diplomatic negotiations.

The Echo regards the sudden softening of the tone of the British press as private assurances from official sources that force would be given to the British representations.

A DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

A Street Car Passenger Fatally Injured in Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 29.—A peculiar accident which resulted in the death of one woman and serious injury to three others occurred at the east end of the Harrison street bridge this afternoon. An open car approached the bridge at a good rate of speed. As the car struck the east end of the bridge the latter shook and swayed up and down for a moment. The heavy, polished hardwood tight wing lever at the east end of the bridge fell from its fastenings and swung around directly against the right side of the car. Miss Nellie Riordan of No. 14 Seldon street, sat near the right hand outer edge of a seat near the middle of the car and the pointed end of the lever struck her in the groin, passed through her body and made a hole in the back of the seat in which she was sitting. The lever extended twenty inches through the body of the woman, pinning her to the fragment of the seat left unbroken by the fearful crash. The driver had by this time obtained control of his horses and brought the car to a stop. Witnesses of the accident were horrified by the horrible sight presented by the impaled woman. Blood was pouring from the wound in her side and flowing on the floor of the car. A physician who was summoned from a house near by saw the woman would bleed to death if the lever was withdrawn from her body. A saw was procured and the lever was sawed off two feet from Miss Riordan's body. The woman, with a portion of the lever still penetrating her body, was conveyed to the county hospital. The attending physician said she would probably bleed to death as soon as the piece of lever was removed.

A priest and her friends were sent for and restoratives were applied. Miss Riordan regained consciousness and was told that she would probably soon die. She took a farewell of her friends after the priest had given her absolution. The hospital surgeons then removed the piece of lever from her body, after which she sank rapidly and in a few minutes died from loss of blood.

The flying splinters made by the lever as it crushed through the seats of the car endangered many lives. A long, sharp splinter struck Miss Maggie Casey, Miss Annie Dexter and Mrs. Maggie Asheroft, who were seriously injured but will probably recover.

Wolves in Sheep's Clothing.

CHICAGO, July 29.—Two men representing themselves to be police officers called at the house of Mrs. R. Ammon, 229 Forty-second Place, this afternoon and pretending that they were searching for stolen diamonds alleged to have been secreted in the servant girl's room by her lover, succeeded in robbing Mrs. Ammon of $3,000 worth of diamonds and jewelry. They prevailed upon the lady to send the girl out of the house and when she had gone they attacked Mrs. Ammon and obtained the jewels. A startling theory in connection with the robbery is that the thieves were actually police officers.

Robbed by His Son.

LEADVILLE, Colo., July 29.—John O'Connor, who came over from Alma this morning, relates that there is much excitement there over a robbery. It seems that an old miser named Judkins has two sons. The old man had saved and hidden away some $1,000 in gold. On Tuesday "Hank," the oldest son, complained of being sick and remained in the cabin. When the father returned Hank and sought and with him had disappeared all the money. The father is on the verge of insanity over the theft. There is no trace to the whereabouts of the rascally son.

Dead in the Street.

DENVER, Colo., July 28.—An unknown man was found lying dead near the Fourth street viaduct at 2 o'clock this afternoon by James Simington and John Mitchell of 2018 Fifteenth street.

The coroner was notified and removed the body. A bank book on the Commercial bank of Guthrie, I. T., was found on the dead man's person. It bore the name of M. A. Bowers. Among his effects was a ticket showing Bowers had pawned his watch for $7 at No. 1751 Larimer street on July 25. A ticket admitting the bearer to River Front park, and signed by Tom Worrell, was also found. There is no suspicion that Bowers committed suicide. The coroner believes he died a natural death.

[illegible]

CHEYENNE, Wyo., July 29.—Governor Osborne does not confirm or deny the rumor that Senator Beckwith has resigned. It is definitely known, however, that the Senator has resigned, and that his successor is appointed. The Senator will be A. L. New, recently appointed Internal Revenue Collector for Colorado and Wyoming. Mr. Beckwith's resignation is thought to be due to the fact that in several newspaper interviews in the East he committed himself to the cause of silver and that his chances of being elected chairman of the national committee of the State are by this reason very slim. Mr. New has never committed himself on the silver question.

EATERS MUST WORK.

The Free Lunch and Shelter Plan to be Discontinued.

DENVER, July 29.—The State, county and city officials in conference to-night decided that Camp Relief, where the unemployed have been fed will be abolished on Thursday morning and the men being cared for there must either go to work or get out of the city. All the tramps and bums who have been attracted to the city by the free food and lodging prepared for Colorado's unemployed guests. Free transportation to the east could not move them. The decision of the committee was that the charging full fare and no more free rides will be given. The citizens' committee will appropriate money to give employment to all who desire to work and others must leave.

The board of supervisors at its meeting this morning adopted a resolution offered by the finance committee, providing for the appropriation of $5,000 from the special improvement fund for the relief of the unemployed. The Mayor and chairman of both branches of the Council are constituted a committee to superintend the employment of men in cutting weeds, repairing streets and such other work as the committee may think best. No man is to work more than thirteen days of each month, that employed every other day.

The city has been quiet all day, and the indications are that the feared outbreak among the unemployed will not occur. No special action has been taken to-day, although Superintendent Dodge of the Colorado Pacific railroad has informed the city, county and State authorities that if any road protection against the crowds desiring to leave will be called upon to take charge of any freight train out. The company is willing to carry a considerable amount of passengers, but objects to hauling train loads of tramps. No action has been taken by the authorities. The usual number, about [illegible] persons, were fed to-day at Camp Relief. Some trouble in the kitchen department led to the dismissal of the cooks, and left on the hands of the management a large quantity of provisions to be disposed of. It is reported that several hundred are coming into Denver from Leadville and Colorado Springs to-day.

New York Stock Market.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Money on call is nominally 1 per cent.

At the opening of business at the Stock Exchange to-day the market was weak and lower.

Chicago Gas was hammered down 7 points to 49, recovered to 49½, receded to 48½ and closed at 49. There was some dispute about the opening price, the 50s claiming gold simultaneously at 49 and 48. Rumors of a bond issue to pay for construction and that the company would pass its dividend accounts for the break. Officials here deny the truth of the reports. The general market displayed weakness, the bears having made the most of the fact that the savings banks would take advantage of the time clause. The conservative element of the street on the other hand commended the action of the presidents. The decline in Chicago Gas and General Electric ranged from 1 to 4½ per cent. The greatest losses were Delaware and Hudson, Lackawanna, the grangers, Missouri Pacific, Manhattan, Western Union, Lake Shore and Louisville and Nashville. The low prices attracted purchases and a recovery of ½ to 1 per cent followed. The trading in odd lots was again on a heavy scale and quite a feature of the market, as the bank statement proved unfavorable as expected and the market eased off again. Among the specialties, Pullman broke 10.

At the close speculation was firmer in tone. The total sales were 167,000 shares.

Moderation the Secret of Digestion.

"The secret of digestion is moderation," said an old man the other day, who at 78 has the complexion of a girl and the relish for food of a schoolboy. "It seems absurd to me that persons should suddenly discover that many articles of food upon which our ancestors lived to a much old age are extremely detrimental to health and longevity. I have never considered what I ought to eat, only what I wanted to eat, but I have made it a rule of my life to always leave the table wanting just a little more.

"I did not leave the farm root, which was on a farm until I was nearly 30 years old, and it was my habit from November till April to eat a piece of mince pie every night just before going to bed. It was rather a small piece, but I invariably took it and do not recall ever having even a bad dream in consequence.

"And I think, too, that digestion is like salvation—to be worked out individually. We are not all Baptists or Methodists; why [illegible] other food cranks? When I got away from the mince pie country, missing it, I took fruit in its place. A friend who saw me eating an apple once might hurled at me the old saw, 'Fruit is gold in the morning, silver at noon, lead at night.' 'Nonsense!' I cried, and retorted with another proverb, 'What is one man's meat is another man's poison.' And I've continued to eat something—usually fruit—every night of my life."—New York Times.

ENDOWMENT POLICIES

Are issued by the PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO., of Philadelphia, which are made payable at a certain specified age of the insured, or at death if occurring before that age is reached.

These policies, if discontinued after two years, are entitled to paid-up policies for a proportional amount, which paid-up policies will also participate in the dividends.

This is obviously the most desirable form of insurance. Ordinarily the head of a family is confronted with two contingencies: First, his death may be untimely, and he may leave his family with an inadequate provision. Secondly, if he should escape this calamity and should live to the commencement of old age, he might find himself with failing powers without a competence for himself and wife. An endowment policy provides against both contingencies. If death should occur the amount of the policy is paid to the family; or, if the insured should live to the maturity of the policy, the amount is paid to himself as a support for his and his wife's old age. SUMMER SCHOOL PROGRESS.

The Summer School is near the end of its season. Some of its courses are finished, and the final courses will be completed this week. It is not yet time for a resumé of the whole work of the season, but a few words may not be out of place in regard to what has been done already.

Undoubtedly the leading feature of the past fortnight—that which interested the most people at any rate, has been the lectures of Dr. Rolfe. During that time he delivered a series of discourses upon literature which deserve to rank with the best of their kind. Thoroughly learned in all that relates to his subject, Dr. Rolfe combines with his learning a grace of style, a kindly humor, and a personal charm that make his lectures altogether delightful; while his voice and manner, and his perfect elocution, give an added charm to essays which would be excellent if they were only printed for the solitary reader. Dr. Rolfe has gone away leaving behind him not only admirers but friends, not only an appreciation of his talent, but also a warm personal regard on the part of those who were privileged to meet him.

Somewhat akin to Dr. Rolfe's lectures on English literature have been those of Miss Kennedy on French literature and literary men. Her audiences have not been so large as those of Dr. Rolfe, but they have enjoyed the lectures exceedingly. Miss Kennedy has showed in these essays an appreciation of all that is best in the authors of whom she writes, a discrimination in her criticisms of them, a familiarity with their lives and works, a delicate and poetic beauty of style, which have made her lectures memorable to all who have heard them.

The other departments of work have been more technical and have been appealed less to the general public; but all the classes are enthusiastic in their work, and it is generally agreed that the courses have all been exceptionally good, and all the instructors excellent in their respective departments.

It is no small matter that Colorado Springs should have such an institution as one of its permanent attractions; and we take it that the success both of last season and of this will make it a permanent attraction. In time it may receive such an endowment as its usefulness richly merits, but even without that it should be, and we doubt not will be, maintained on the present basis.

Again we congratulate the Director and Faculty of the school, and the people of Colorado Springs, upon the abundant success of the present session.

THE NEW "EASTERN QUESTION."

For many years the "Eastern Question," for Europe, has been the question of the Balkan peninsula. It is a question yet, for neither the treaty of San Stefano nor the treaty of Berlin settled it; but for the present it is overshadowed in importance by a more Eastern question—the question of Siam. A few days ago, when it was supposed that Russia would back up France actively in all her undertakings, it seemed as if the Siamese trouble might involve all Europe. Now, however, it is denied, on what seems to be good authority, that Russia will lend to France any active support whatever. On the other hand, it is certain that China will be hostile, and the British government will keep a jealous eye on the interests of its constituents in Siam, which are a hundred times larger, probably, than the French.

For the present it appears that the Siamese government, left to its own resources, has been compelled to consent to the harsh terms of the French ultimatum. These terms are altogether outrageous. There is no excuse, except the old one that might makes right—for the enormous demands made by France. But even the acquisition of the coveted territory will not settle the question, though it may be "a good enough Morgan till after election" for the present French administration. If Lord Rosebery has consented to the seizure of a large part of the Siamese Empire by France, he has been laying up trouble for some future successor of his in the Foreign Office, and also, it may incidentally be mentioned, rendering still more certain than it was already the defeat of his party in the next Parliamentary election.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS INCIDENT.

The comments of the British press on the riot that occurred in the House of Commons Thursday night are interesting, if not all instructive. Of the Conservative journals, The Times is perhaps the severest, when it says:

"Mr. Gladstone must feel some qualms when he looks upon the working out of his latest achievement. The suppression of free debate by the tyrannical vote of the majority is another of the French revolutionary convention than of the English House of Commons. It is certain to disintegrate and demoralize Parliament. It has inspired the victorious faction, largely composed of Irish separatists, always contemptuously regardless of the rules and traditions of parliamentary life, with an insolent passion for trampling and silencing all opponents. It has goaded the minority, deprived of the right to discuss the measure involving vast constitutional changes, into an outburst of angry indignation. We regret that the opposition took notice of the disgraceful insults with which Mr. Chamberlain was assailed. The political manners of the House might have been left to serve as an example of what would occur in the Irish legislature should Mr. Gladstone succeed in establishing that preposterous body."

The Daily News lays all the blame on Mr. Chamberlain's Herodian epithet, and threatens that leader with dire vengeance thus:

"When the public learn how the disturbance arose, there will be a universal feeling of indignation and regret that the most illustrious statesman of the age was exposed to such insults as those flung by Mr. Chamberlain. To compare Mr. Gladstone with Herod at the awful close of his career met the warmest approval of the opposition. To refer to Mr. Chamberlain as Judas" was an outrage to be resented with violence. Accordingly that whereas Mr O'Connor apologized, there was no hint of apology or retraction, or from Mr. Chamberlain and his allies. Mr. Chamberlain knew and probably intended all that was meant by a comparison of the prime minister with Herod. The people of the country will resent the insult in a manner which may cause Mr. Chamberlain and his friends to regret for the rest of their political lives."

The Pall Mall Gazette, now under Mr. William Waldo Astor's management, a Conservative organ, puts its opinion epigrammatically:

"Every Englishman must feel the disgrace. Nevertheless it cannot be said that the scene was out of keeping with the whole history of the Home Rule bill. When Parliament had been violently ravished of its freedom it is idle to complain over much because its petticoats are soiled. Mr. Gladstone murdered the House and rabbed set in."

We trust the entire Parliament appreciates the infernal compliment of that last comparison.

All these extracts, as well as the incident itself, go to show the inflamed state of partisan opinion in England. We think sometimes that our American national politics are hot, but compared with the English bitterness, our party spirit is feeble.

The trouble that occurred yesterday in Manitou was really the outcome of the same spirit of disorder that led to the lynching in Denver. The persons concerned in the assault on Mr. Frowine seem to have been put up to it by the machinations of that disreputable sheet The Tourist, which has been trying to stir up strife in Manitou ever since it was established, and to encourage the baser element in the town to overt violence. Mr. Frowine has conducted himself throughout the whole affair with propriety and courage, and has the sympathy of all respectable people, who will be glad that his assailants were so neatly and completely worsted.

At last Mr. Cleveland has appointed a Collector and an Appraiser for the port of New York. The new Collector, Mr. James T. Kilbreth, is known to local fame as a police justice. Of course he is a member of the Tammany organization, and almost equally of course he is not one of the men that were prominently mentioned for the place. For Appraiser, Mr. Burr of Cooperstown, is the new appointee. He is a newspaper man pretty well known throughout the State. It is appalling to think of the number of puns that will be made on his name. Before he gets through he will be sorry and not altogether on account of the puns that he ever took the place.

The delegation from this city to the Chicago Silver Convention will be small—and not very early. The Denver men gobbled up all the transportation, and most of the representative men who were on the delegation could not spare the time anyhow. We are sorry that the convention has been deprived of some of its very best delegates.

By the death of Mr. E. C. Helm Colorado Springs has lost one of its best citizens. A kindlier, more genial, more unselfish spirit never breathed in mortal clay. He was a good man, a firm friend, a devoted husband and father.

The Colorado View of Silver.

The people of Colorado, in view of the total demonetization of silver, feel very much as the people of Pennsylvania and New Jersey would feel if Congress should pass a bill on the 8th of August totally abolishing all duties upon manufactures of iron, glass and pottery. A free-trader might believe that it would be better for the whole country in the long run; but if he were also a man, he would have some sympathy with the thousands of his fellow-men who would be thrown out of employment, and if he were a statesman, he would scarcely think it wise to make so sudden and sweeping a change. The silver miners have even a stronger case than the iron workers would have in the supposed event; for since the foundation of the government silver has been a money metal, and men have gone into silver mining on the faith that the historic monetary policy was to be maintained, and both parties, in their National platforms, declared last year for the coinage of both gold and silver; whereas the Democratic party, on that same platform, gave fair notice a year ago to the iron men that it considered all protection unconstitutional, and proposed to make a tariff for revenue only. It is because they fear that the Administration and Congress are going to violate the pledges of all the platforms, and put this country completely on a monometallic gold basis, that the people of Colorado are protesting. In view of these facts, and in view of Mr. Cleveland's apparent failure to make any effort whatever toward the adoption of an international bimetallic agreement, have they not some right to protest?—William Alexander Platt, in The Gazette.

Saturday Night.

Saturday night is the silver mile post of the journey of life. How pleasant to the laboring man to look forward to the close of a week of toil, when, with his hard-earned wages he purchases the necessary supplies for his family, and goes home to enjoy the evening's repose that precedes the sacred day of rest. Wealth is not necessary for his enjoyment of Saturday night. His hands may be hardened with toil, his face may be browned by exposure to the sun, his clothes may be coarse and soiled, but his children meet him at the gate and his wife greets him with a smile and words of welcome. His home humble, but within it is contentment, the result of honest labor, unknown within the mansions of the rich. It matters not whether the laboring man's Saturday night comes enshrouded in a mantle of cloud, let down from the mighty mountains, or whether it comes bathed in the beautiful sunshine that kisses the valley ere the mighty Peak interposes its towering head to chase out the light of the last day of the week and to receive the last caress of golden light on its head of crystal whiteness. It matters not to the son of toil how they approach this silver mile-post, their joy is calm, serene and sure.

The man of wealth, who dwells in a palace of luxury, whose every want is supplied without any effort on his part, may welcome the close of the week, but he knows nothing of the real satisfaction enjoyed by his humble brother who grooms his horses or cares for his lawn. Who would exchange the laboring man's Saturday night, with its absolute rest and freedom from care, for the uncertain and unsatisfying contentment promised by wealth, but, like the mirage of the plains, is never reached? Or who would dare to exchange the laboring man's Saturday night, with its homely joys, for the debauch and revelry of the gambling house and the saloon?

THE FLEETING SHOW.

Stories and Gossip Picked Up on the Streets.

Up at the Bank Block they have a yellow cur worth about 25 cents, so far as cars go, but the owner would not sell him for that. He proposes to go prospecting in that dog some day for he is a depository for numerous silver pieces. Last week some mining brokers wanted to be funny and began tossing silver pieces at the animal, thinking it would frighten him as the money jingled on the stone walk. That dog was no gold bug, however, and before he could be choked off swallowed two dollars and a half. A young physician was told about the dog's passion for the depreciated coin and tried him with a 52 cent dollar. By using an emetic he recovered his money, but I submit that it was not a fair thing to do.

What I am told about the Siamese language is interesting, but it does not inspire me with a desire to use it in ordinary conversation. In the first place there is a very considerable difference between the way a great many words are pronounced and the way they are spelled. The word hapiec for instance is pronounced "nakhon;" nokhinom is known to its friends as "noathom" and ka-nom answers to the call of "kuson." Furthermore a single word may have a dozen different meanings, determined only by a slight variation in the pronunciation. If the Siamese says hin, he may mean a relation, white, to flatter, to smooth or to relate, according to the way he says it. This is of course convenient for the speaker, but evidently requires an uncomfortably close attention from the listener. There are a great many ordinary objects for which there are no words in Siamese, but the difficulty is ingeniously avoided. Not being able to say thumb, they call it me mon, "mother of the hand," and in similar fashion the workingman is lok can, "son of hire." A sample Siamese sentence, leaving out the accents, which are numerous, is as follows: Mun ao nanon ni ko way fak-rai ki phai-khay lai khao nai which may be freely translated as, "When you have finished reading your GAZETTE, pass it along to your neighbors." The more I hear about other languages, the better I like English.

An enterprising picture peddlar has been working our world-be art patrons to a queen's taste the past week. He has a crate of pictures at one of the depots of three varieties and gorgeously framed. Any one of the pictures is frightful enough if placed on a track to start an electric car in a thunder storm. There are little trees and houses, with big cows and horses, green clouds and pale blue grass. Now this dealer's plan is to rush up to a business man, who likely knows as much about a picture as he does how to make tutti frutti ice cream, explain that the picture was painted on an order by a wealthy art patron of the city but who is unable to take the picture on account of the hard times. He explains that he must catch the next train and asks for a bid on the treasure. The business man names a price that would be ridiculous for a real picture and it is instantly accepted. The art patron carries his picture home in triumph, but when it throws the baby into convulsions and his wife realizes that her fall bonnet has been jeopardized in the purchase of the chromo, his enthusiasm vanishes. The dealer has done a thriving business here. One man paid $7 for a picture, while another got three for $5.

IMPORTANT WORK.

JURORS OF AWARDS AT THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

A Revolution in the Method of Granting Medals or Awards After a Bitter Battle Fought Single-Handed and Alone—Comparison Between the Old and New Way of Judging.

WORLD'S FAIR, July 23.—[Special.]—For a week or more visitors at the exposition have noticed small squads of men going about among the various exhibits with catalogues and notebooks in hand and attended, usually, by the owners of the wares, or in the case of foreign exhibits often by the royal or imperial commissioners from the country whence they came, with a guard of honor in splendid military uniform, a secretary and messengers as well. These are the examiners and jurors who are to sift out of the mass of exhibits those which are worthy the medals to be awarded for excellence or advancement. This is important work, and upon these men, who go about so quietly, attended with such diligence and eagerness by interested parties, the eyes of the commercial world are now fixed. The result of their labors means a great deal to all the arts and industries represented here, to the sixty thousand or more exhibitors and the vast interests which lie behind them.

It is a tremendous task which these men have undertaken. Their business it is to examine carefully and critically every article here exhibited. They must slight nothing, must deem nothing too trivial for their attention. These are the men upon whom devolves the responsibility of summing up the achievements of the artisans, artists, mechanics, farmers and manufacturers of the whole world, as mirrored in this most thorough and comprehensive of universal exposition. They will be weeks at their task, and after they shall have completed their rounds of examination they will have weeks more of labor in reducing their findings to form and in writing out their reports. When these reports are published, as they will be some time during the coming winter, we shall have the best critical judgment on the achievements of man in the world of art and fabrication that was ever formed or set down in words.

It is with a genuine feeling of satisfaction that I record a noteworthy fact in the history of this exposition. It is not only the greatest of all known expositions, but it has marked a distinct step forward in the all-important matter of granting medals or awards to exhibitors and exhibits. It was not enough for the Columbian exposition to follow the beaten track in this matter. Through the genius and the energy of a single individual, John Boyd Thacher, of Albany, N. Y., a revolution has been effected which promises to enable this exposition to accomplish more that is really valuable to civilization and to the arts than all the expositions that have preceded it. Mr. Thacher is entitled to more credit because in order to effect this revolution, he has been compelled to fight a bitter battle single handed and alone.

The representatives of foreign nations did not like his new system, for reasons which I will explain. They rebelled, and made so much ado over their dissatisfaction that they alarmed the managers of the fair and Mr. Thacher soon found not only all the representatives of foreign nations and exhibitors but the very men who should have been with him up in arms against him. To add to the difficulty, the press of Chicago maligned and misrepresented him. They lied about his plan, and ridiculed him personally. Without even understanding what it was that Mr. Thacher was trying to accomplish, without ever taking the trouble to look into his work and ascertain if there was not some good in it, the newspaper men of Chicago hounded him in a manner which was discreditable to their profession and to the city of the exposition. Mr. Thacher was not working for glory or profit. A cultured, broad-minded, progressive man, he had seen an opportunity to mark a distinct advancement in the method of awarding prizes to exhibitors, and like the man of courage and persistency that he is he fought it out on that line, with all these allies against him. He won the battle, too, and that is why I am writing this letter. He gave his time and his energies to the cause without a dollar of pay, to the neglect of his private affairs, and amid personal discomforts and annoyances which would have driven almost any man from the field. When the history of the Columbian exposition is written as it deserves to be written I predict that no name will stand higher on its roll of honor than that of John Boyd Thacher.

First let me tell you what the old system was, the system of awards that had been followed at every international exposition up to this time. It was a system in which there were juries of awards. A jury was selected for each line of exhibits, and consisted of three, five or seven men, sometimes more. They went about amid the exhibits, attended by a secretary, and each man marked on a card his estimate of the artistic or commercial value of each article. For example, let us suppose we are with the committee on pianos. Mr. A. thinks a certain piano is worth 95, Mr. B. thinks it is worth only 90, while Mr. C. puts the value at 98. An average of these three estimates is made by the clerk with the aid of a leaf pencil, and a few minutes, and the official finding of the valuation of this piano comes out as 94.33. Mr. B. is sure that his judgment of 90 was all the instrument was fairly entitled to, while Mr. C. is just as sure that the piano should be marked 98. The only man whose judgment has been supported by the leaf pencil method is Mr. A., who has been endorsed because he happened to be about midway between the figures of his colleagues.

This method of ascertaining values or merits goes on through the entire exposition. When all the pianos have been marked the one which has the highest value is adjudged winner of the gold medal. The next highest gets the silver medal, and the third the bronze medal. Now what is the effect of this award? The manufacturer who gets the gold medal is the only one that amounts to much commercially may be richer by half a million dollars than he was before he got it. The award is worth so much to him, for the purpose of advertising his instrument and extending his trade, fully that sum. If he could have gotten the award in no other way, and could have done so without being discovered, he might have been willing to pay several hundred thousand dollars in cash for it. The jury of awards has helped him mightily in his endeavor to amass a great fortune. It is a good scheme for him, but how about the other piano makers? How do they fare? Excepting the two who have received consolation awards of silver and bronze medals all are unhappy. They have been handicapped in the race for trade. They have entered a competition only to see their enemy gain an immense advantage over them, which you may be sure he will make the most of. In other words, the exposition has resolved itself into a huge advertising auxiliary. It presumes to set one man up in fortune making, and to hold another man down. It presents one man with a piece of metal worth half a million dollars to him, and hurts all his competitors. If this could be done on some nicely accurate and infallible judgment there would not be so much objection to it. It would be still objectionable, but not so grievously so. But it cannot be done and has never been done on any infallible plan. In fact, the selection of a piano justly entitled to grand prize in this exposition would be altogether a work of fancy, of caprice, of fervidness or of prejudice. It would take infinite intelligence to do that. One piano excels in tone, perhaps, another in touch, a third in durability, a fourth in some other quality. The differences between them on each of these lines is so slight that not even an expert can estimate them with certainty. His judgment must be more or less arbitrary, dependent upon his education, his tastes, his surroundings. In fact, the making of these awards of first, second and third prizes is largely a lottery, and has always been, as is shown by the granting of first prize at Paris to the pottery of one country in 1889, and first prize to another in 1889, though the same exhibitors with the same class of wares contended on both occasions. This is only one of many examples that could be mentioned of the purely arbitrary or fanciful method of granting first, second and third prizes.

The plain, blunt truth is that these big gold medals, worth fortunes to their possessors, have in the past been struggled for just as men struggle to win lawsuits. Interested exhibitors have employed skillful diplomats to handle their cases for them. They have hired lawyers, counsellors and even detectives. They have schemed and intrigued to pack the juries. The prize was worth struggling for with every art known to human ingenuity, and thus these gold lottery awards have been struggled for at every exposition in the past.

At the Vienna exposition, for instance, an American firm of beer brewers won a gold medal. No one has contended that they had the best beer in the exhibit, but they had the best managers or the best luck. Well, the gold medal the firm has estimated was worth more than a million dollars to them in working up sales in this country. With its aid they have built up the greatest brewery in America.

The most serious objection to the graded prize, competitive method of awards, aside from the scandals which often accompany the juries, the injustice to defeated exhibitors, and the extravagant value given the winner on merely fanciful grounds, is that it does not help the consumer. It throws no light upon the questions in which he is interested. On the contrary, it may very easily and often does help to deceive him. To illustrate, suppose you want to buy a piano. Your circumstances are such that you want the best piano made for durability. If it has good tone and touch and other qualities, even if not the best, you will be satisfied. But durability it must have to suit your purposes. For light you turn to the award of the latest exposition. That will surely give you the evidence you want, you think. But it doesn't do anything of the sort. It only deceives you. Noting that a certain piano obtained the grand prize you naturally conclude that must be the best, and though it costs from 30 to 40 per cent. more than other makes on account of the honor awarded it by the exposition, you gladly pay the difference in order to get the best. In a short time you discover that while the piano which you have purchased has as fine a tone as any in the market it does not wear well, and that as a matter of fact for a much smaller sum you could have bought one with as good a tone and greater durability. You have a right to complain that the exposition award, which at first could have been a help to you, has actually been a harm.

This exposition has abandoned all the old methods. There is no competition between exhibitors. There are to be no scandals, no intrigues, for the glittering prizes. There are no gold medals, no silver medals, no graded medals of any kind. No man through a fancy or a shade of difference in leaf pencil judgment is to be enriched while another is handicapped. The only medals to be awarded are of bronze and all have the same value, the same inscription. Some are awarded not for the best, or second best, or third best, according to some man's fancy, but as reward for excellence of advancement or for special usefulness of a high grade.

Best of all, each of these medals is to be accompanied by a diploma which will set forth, in simple, broad language, the grounds on which the award is made. If a piano is given a medal for its touch, that fact will be stated in the diploma. If for durability, that will be set forth. If for tone, the diploma will so state. If for a combination of these qualities, the document will explain in what proportion. So with everything in the exposition. Every thing that reaches a high stage of excellence, that shows meritorious advancement in that art, will be awarded a medal. And the public, the cause of education, the value of honest methods of advertising, will receive the benefit of this, I repeat, by exposing all the fashions in the arts and sciences.

When an article gets a medal at this exhibit you will know that it is a fine article of its class, that it has strong, positive merit, and you will be able to judge just what those points are.

Irreverent Humor.

Bryan says the people of the East "should visit the great Mississippi valley and learn that [illegible] prepared to legislate for American and propose to do so." He says they will not surrender the Sherman act except for something better, and "if the terms offered do not suit we will have our arms to fight with." From which it will be seen that Bryan is not only at the present moment very dangerous to the peace of Kansas and Nebraska, but that he is liable to endanger the peace of the nation and embroil us in another civil war. When he and Governor Waite of Colorado and the Rev. Mr. Reed and the Red-Headed Rooster of the Rockies join forces and begin their march eastward there threatens to be trouble. People who have kept up their courage in the face of Lieutenant Totten's mathematical demonstrations from the prophecies of Daniel that we are past passing half past 11 and on the origin of "Low Twelve" will then throw up the sponge. And yet will it be believed there are light minded and frivolously disposed persons who in the face of all that impends will toss their heads and say: "This is the old gyascutus game." The gyascutus, it will be remembered, was the fierce, fire-breathing, bloodthirsty animal which a few impressions of imaginative minds advertised for exhibition a great many years ago in a western town. At the hour of opening the show, when the house was full and the receipts had been gathered at the box office, there was a great clarking of chairs and tumbling of furniture and shrieking and howling behind the curtain, in the midst of which one of the proprietors of the show rushed to the front in a dishevelled condition, crying—"Fellow citizens, yourselves! The gyascutus is loose!" The audience tumbled over itself to get away—and did. So did the proprietors of the show. And no one in the town ever afterward saw any signs of the gyascutus or the showmen or the good money they had passed into the box office.

We hate to say so, but it is true that many persons in the East believe that Governor White and the Red-Headed and the "Rooster" and the eloquent Bryan are doing are doing the gyascutus act. It is not to be denied, however, that everybody is, as Governor Waite says, "scared to death." And what every body wants to know is how many gyascutuses are loose.—[New York Tribune.

What Man Has Done With Engines.

In performing the work of modern civilization man has compelled the service of over [illegible] horsepower of steam engines, equivalent to more than [illegible] average power, for the good [illegible] of the steam engine is to that extent in excess of the power of the animal. This is the equivalent of the steady working power of the whole population of the globe, and probably largely in excess of that amount.—Engineering Magazine.

A rich strike was made in the Rhinocerous and Nil Desperandum claims, owned by the Gould company, a few days ago. These claims are located half a mile north of the Raven and thousands of dollars have been spent upon them in looking for pay mineral but no good results were obtained until the claims were leased to Messrs Vallatt, Sanders, Maud and Dahl a little over a week ago. These gentlemen went to work at once on a part of the claim that had not been prospected before and found rich mineral close to the surface. They now have a twelve foot hole which shows what appears to be a vein twelve feet in width with a pay streak twenty-two inches wide and a wonderfully rich streak on the foot wall about five inches in width. The lessees now have ready for shipment 100 sacks, running from $100 to $200 per ton and five sacks of the rich streak running from $500 to $700 to the pound. The lease expires in March and by its terms the lessees pay 10 per cent. royalty on all ore under $50 and 20 per cent. on all over that amount. B.

THE COMING RACES.

It is Hoped that the Bicycle Records will be Broken.

What promises to be one of the most important and exciting meetings in the history of Colorado cycling will be given at the Country Club on Saturday, Aug. 12, and is already causing no little enthusiasm, not only among our local wheelmen, but also among the many clubs which room to thrive in every town and hamlet of the State. A visit to Denver by Mr. Vedder, the energetic manager of the Country Club, in the interests of the meeting proved satisfactory. Every club in the capital city is strongly represented, and it is confidently expected and even promised that existing State records will take such a tumble that they will hold for a lengthened period. Among the most prominent riders who are expected and who have promised to attend may be mentioned Mr. G. E. Boles of the Denver Athletic club, who won the State championship for five miles at Greeley on July 4th in the splendid time of 11:21; Mr. W. W. Hardman of the Pueblo Rovers, who holds the mile championship in 2:22 and who recently lowered four records in one day at the meet of the Ramblers club in Denver; James Cutler, Denver Ramblers, two mile State champion in 5:28; James D. Park, winner of the Novice race at Greeley in the remarkably fast time for a novice of 2:41 1-5; J. A. McGuire, who won the three and five mile races at the club on June 17; Louis Block, Austin Banks, Pinchon Peppin, and a host of others.

Should Boles and Hamilton get together the records are gone, and the meeting of these giants of the wheel will be in itself a sight worth journeying miles to witness. As an inducement to record smashing the Country Club will in addition to the regular prizes give handsome medals for all existing State records broken.

In addition to this galaxy of stars in the cycling firmament, the Denver Athletic club will be strongly represented by the pick of its talent in the sprint races, while the Denver Wheel club has written for a few 2 or 1 Black entries for the sprint races.

Given Colorado Springs weather, those who attend will have nothing to regret. The Country club has an enviable record for its entertainments and the present bids fair to outdo its many successful predecessors.

SUMMER SCHOOL NOTES.

Last Week of the Course—Special Rates Opened.

The last week of the Summer School begins tomorrow and some of the most attractive courses of the whole session are to be given. Special tickets for the week have been placed at $3, and these may be purchased at the College, the High School, The Antlers, the Alta Vista, the Elk and the Consolidated Drug Store.

Dr. Ely's course on "Socialism" begins on Monday evening at the High School. Dr. Ely will deeply his treatment into four main heads, as follows:

1. The Nature of Socialism.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Enterprising Firms Who Believe in the Use of Printers' Ink.

Auld Bros., the tailors, have for their motto, "The best, rather than the cheapest."

All the latest styles of writing papers, tablets, stationery, etc., will always be found at Q. J. Wellington's.

Hibbard & Co., 12 North Tejon street, are making exceedingly low prices on muslin underwear, for the next few days.

The Oriental Rug sale now in progress at 119 East Pike's Peak avenue, will continue until Friday morning of this week.

The Famous shoe store are quoting some exceedingly low prices on shoes. See their price list in their advertisement.

Dicken's Pike's Peak Curiosity store takes the lead in low prices in curios and opals. His sales have been quite large in this line.

The daily telegraphic quotations of lead and silver posted in front of Leonard, Doubleday & Rogers office are a public convenience.

Hext & Williams make a specialty of tuning and repairing pianos. They are now making special prices on musical instruments and sheet music.

The Wilbur Dry Goods company say they will give 50 per cent. off on every hat in their millinery department. Dry goods in the same proportion.

Woodworth, Smith & Randall have just received their new Columbine souvenir spoons. They are very pretty. They invite you to call and see them.

Matt Conway says there has been a regular panic in the shoe business, and persons buying shoes from him now will get them for almost nothing.

If you wish to rent a furnished or unfurnished house consult the advertising column of Henry LeB. Wills & Co. The list is large and always corrected to date.

Fairley Bros. are offering "hard time" prices on all furniture and crockery goods in their store. This, coming from them, means big bargains in every line.

A. Matthews's large crockery and glassware store is a credit to Colorado Springs. The stock is one of the best selected in the West, and prices to suit the rich and the poor.

Emery, the photographer, is introducing the platinotype, a new process in photography, which very much resembles steel engraving. Samples are now on exhibition at his studio.

N. O. Johnson & Sons commence tomorrow a special sale of lawns, challies and white dress goods. This means a reduction of from one third to one half of the present low price.

W. H. Metz of the Colorado Springs Steam Laundry, has just added one of the latest and largest drying and ironing machines made to his plant, which will be in running order by the middle of the week. It is the largest of the kind in the West. He will exhibit it to the public some time during the week.

Holbrook & Perkins are now making a run of gentlemen's underwear, and will give 50 per cent. reduction on everything in that line. The bargains can also be had of them on light overcoats.

Giddings Bros. & Bent's great clearance sale will only last a few days longer. Never before in the history of the city have there been such low prices on dry goods as they are now offering.

The most picturesque and delightful carriage drive in the world is said to be over the carriage line to Pike's Peak. Arrangements have been made from Colorado Springs over the Midland railway for $5 the round trip.

Louis Lindgren is the oldest practical jeweler in this county. He learned the trade when a lad in Germany, and has worked at that business almost continuously since, and is an expert in the business.

W. F. McKechan is selling large live spring chickens at 35 cents each; for $1; dressed hens per pound 15 cents, ripe tomatoes per pound 5 cents, cabbage per pound 2 cents, creamery butter per pound 25 cents, choice new potatoes and onions. AN AWFUL CRISIS. In one of his remarkable lectures Tesla states that most scientific men look upon the various forms of manifestation of energy, which are generally designated "electric" as energy manifestations of the same nature as those of radiant heat, light. The phenomena of heat and heat and others besides may therefore be called electrical phenomena, and this is that electrical science has become the mother science of all and is truly all important. The day when we shall know exactly what energy is will chronicle an event probably greater and of more moment than any other recorded in the history of the human race.

The path of an aerolite, seen in Austria and Italy on July 7, 1892, has been investigated by Professor Von Niessl. The length of the path was about six hundred miles from the nearest approach to the earth, which was forty-two miles, to the point of its disappearance at a height of about one hundred miles.

Returns for 1891 show that Sweden had one telephone for each 200 inhabitants; Germany, one for each 1200; Italy, one for each 2800; France, one for each 3000; England, one for each 6000, and Russia, one for each 18,000.

A novel tunnel is projected for the Neva at St. Petersburg. It is to be cylindrical in form, forty-three feet in diameter, and to have four floors or decks for pedestrians, vehicles, cars and telegraphic cables respectively.

The [illegible] Casino will be omitted to-day, owing to special evening attraction. The orchestra programme to-night is entirely selected from the French composers, among them Gounod, Bizet, Saint-Saens, Ambroise Thomas, Massenet, Godard, Chopin, Gillet and Berlioz.

Messrs. W. H. Leonard, H. K. Devereaux, F. Braggiotti and A. M. Baker leave this morning over the Midland for Glenwood Springs, to be absent a couple of weeks. They skipped their ponies last night and the Glenwood people will be treated to some excellent games of polo during their stay.

Mr. J. J. White, recently of Pittsburg, Pa., has bought the Club Coffee restaurant from Mr. T. T. Daugherty and will take possession on Tuesday morning next. Mr. White has had many years of experience in the restaurant business, and this popular hostelry will lose none of its prestige by the change in management.

Children's day at the Casino was a tremendous success yesterday afternoon. The band played its most inspiring music, Mrs. Whitney's pupils gave some beautiful fancy dances, and everybody had a good time. As for the children, from the babes in arms up, they enjoyed themselves immensely, and went home to Broadmoor every day.

The county owns the large house on Nevada avenue next to the Court house. Mrs. Cassady, agent of the Aid society, has a scheme for converting it into headquarters for the society and to be used as a day nursery, where mothers who are compelled to work by the day can leave their children to be cared for in their absence.

The Gazette job printing office is better prepared to make blank books or do job printing than any other establishment in the West. People who have large orders for books should get them in now, when the orders can be promptly filled and not wait until fall when the rush of printing election tickets and other county work will be on. There is not an establishment in Denver or the West as complete as the Gazette office.

W. F. McKechan will sell fresh eggs all of this week at [illegible] cents per dozen.

In everybody's mouth—the San Bernardo cigar.

The mining stock market maintained its calm yesterday. The brokers are taking the situation philosophically, some are getting fishing, others playing golf, and all seem to be waiting for the silver question, if the railroads would only open their hearts. Colonel was quoted at [illegible] yesterday, with several considerable sales. Pharmacist was stronger and higher at [illegible]. Anaconda opened the week at [illegible]. H BEAT HIM OUT.

VER SCHOOLMA'AM'S ENCOUNTER WITH A DESPERADO.

Bart, the Notorious Highwayman of Texas Once Met a Real American Who Played a Game of Poker Him For Odd Stakes.

Bart, the notorious highwayman of Texas, during his career met one American woman who turned the tables on him very cleverly. Bart was [illegible] while holding up the coaches [illegible] he did the most unusual [illegible].

[illegible] in the spring of 1872 North [illegible] mountains, about 25 miles, in the [illegible] mountains, is a deep canyon [illegible] 150 of which is a beautiful fall [illegible] known as "The Maiden's Tears." [illegible] city trail wound through the [illegible] the falls the trail lay across [illegible] with the stream on one [illegible] of large bowlders on the [illegible] was crossing the open space. The [illegible] sat by the side of the driver, [illegible] the heat of the sun, and the [illegible] seeming to keep his eyes open. [illegible] were seven passengers, [illegible] young woman bound [illegible] school. She was good [illegible] she had been a teacher [illegible] the mining districts of the [illegible] was thoroughly acquainted [illegible] rough element in [illegible] she lived.

[illegible] the center of the [illegible] the loops of a lasso hung [illegible] shoulders over chest settled [illegible] and arms of the drowsy [illegible] twinkling of an eyelid [illegible] ground. At the same [illegible] calling from among the [illegible] driver to stop the horses [illegible] The driver obeyed [illegible] The passengers stuck [illegible] the coach doors just in [illegible] from the voice [illegible] down and line up [illegible] their heads. The [illegible] obeyed. When they [illegible] Bart, holding a revolver [illegible] the lasso in the other, [illegible] the boulders and [illegible] the coach stood.

[illegible] securely, he pro[illegible] the passengers of their [illegible] losing the plunder [illegible] he had set down [illegible] the road. In the pack[illegible] he found a pack [illegible] He threw them with the [illegible] his hat. When he [illegible] the passengers, he [illegible] down now, ge[illegible] awkward stand[illegible] I'm sorry to pick you [illegible] but, you see, I had to [illegible] I thought that this would [illegible] a good way to strike. I'm [illegible] you for putting you to so much trouble," [illegible] politely apologetically [illegible] coachman, who astonished [illegible] passengers by smiling back [illegible]

[illegible] himself, Bart. It was no [illegible]

"[illegible]," said Bart inquiringly. [illegible] so often that I [illegible] acquainted with you." to [illegible]

[illegible] appeared to feel flat[illegible] your spunk," he said, [illegible] when they see me." [illegible] a man yet that I'd faint [illegible] the woman, to the horror of [illegible] passengers, who were afraid she [illegible] But and drove him to some [illegible] A second or two later they [illegible] with amazement when [illegible]

[illegible] I'll bet you that I can beat you [illegible] for it. If I don't, you may [illegible] whether property [illegible] Will you do it?"

[illegible] stared Bart for an in[illegible] himself, and laugh[illegible]

[illegible] beat any woman I ever [illegible] I never kiss a woman [illegible] but if you want to take [illegible] pay you, but I reckon [illegible] the best of the bargain."

[illegible] tacitly intimated that she [illegible] to play for those stakes, [illegible] were made for the game. [illegible] the driver should deal. [illegible] Bart insisted that the half [illegible] should stand up in a row [illegible] that he might detect any [illegible] trickery. The teacher seated [illegible] pouch, that Bart had [illegible] for a purpose, and with his [illegible] his lap he settled him[illegible] a short distance from her. [illegible] to start the game, and [illegible] the first card to Bart face [illegible] card fell at the feet of the [illegible] Each player was now en[illegible] to be dealt face up, and [illegible] of clubs, while to the [illegible] seven spot of diamonds [illegible] next caught the five spot. [illegible] his face flushed and he [illegible] for the first card dealt [illegible] spot, and he now held a [illegible] drew the deuce of dia[illegible] well his station when the [illegible] before him proved to be [illegible] clubs. He now had three [illegible] sure the game was his, [illegible] the four spot of spades. [illegible] looked wretched, but she [illegible] the least disconcerted as [illegible] at Bart's pair of fives and [illegible] seven spot high. The [illegible] and the queen of clubs fell [illegible] and the seven spot of [illegible] the dealer's draw. She had a [illegible] sight.

"[illegible] Your luck came late," he [illegible] you'll lose the kiss, for [illegible] five." He turned up the [illegible] gave him three fives.

"[illegible] well, sir," said the teacher [illegible] another seven spot here, and [illegible] of these are better than your [illegible] turned up the "roll" card, and [illegible] was a seven spot. [illegible] back for an instant, but [illegible] that he had been fairly [illegible] and helping the teacher [illegible] "Gentlemen, I've lost a [illegible] stake. Come up here, one at a [illegible] what belongs to you out of [illegible]

[illegible] fully obeyed the order [illegible] their firearms. In a few mo[illegible] passengers were in the coach and [illegible] up the trail with a dash.

[illegible] story of the schoolmaster's [illegible] told at Nevada City, the citizens [illegible] with a handsome gold watch. [illegible] company gave her a [illegible] The brave woman still lives [illegible] Nevada town, where she [illegible] wife of a prominent lawyer. [illegible] Demorest.

The Bride's Demeanor.

[illegible] to see that the bride paid [illegible] the compliment of looking [illegible] happy and full of life and fun [illegible] Such nonsense. It was [illegible] two such happy faces as his [illegible] when walking to the altar [illegible] did not shine. Of course that should be [illegible] some brides think it [illegible] to adopt, as though they were [illegible] their own funeral. [illegible] instance this was so absurdly [illegible] to be quite laughable. It [illegible] compliment to the unfortunate [illegible] standing near the altar and watching his chosen wife approach with a wan[illegible] like a pale ghost and with a very [illegible] guilt and shame in her face. It is quite time that such relics of the dark ages of [illegible] should disappear in favor of a more natural demeanor.

At the same time there is an opposite extreme to be avoided. I remember one little, an actor's daughter, who simply raised her veil to hide her face, allowing him to tumble over the footstool of the [illegible]. The spectacle of the bride made tearing after them in a lively canter the eight years of delicious married joy. One would suppose that the bride would at the least manage to wave the man away before she removed him. Maude declared that she saw a furtive smile pass across the groomsman's face when the parting procession came to a pause in front of him, composing themselves after their fashion.—London Queen.

BEAUTY ALBUMS.

Result of Kate Jordan's Visit to a New York Photograph Store.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, July 21.—I stood in a popular little shop on Broadway the other day. On the walls, in glass vases, in the windows, were lines of photographs, lots of them, and in boxes and stacked piles a full ton of them. Photographs everywhere. There were actors and actresses, famous ministers, pugilists, authors, statesmen and women who are photographed for beauty's sake alone. These last were in the majority.

If you do not think that each country has its own particular type of feminine beauty, it is because you have not thought seriously of the matter at all. The beautiful English woman is quite unlike the equally beautiful American, and both are essentially different from the Austrian. The professional beauty of the Saxony is land is big, broad shouldered, with a marvelously fine poised head. She is fearless eyed, placed, impossibly almost by sounding mass.

The American is always slighter. There is vivacity in her expression, her features are more delicate, her mouth and chin indicative of daughter and independence. In a mood, she looks as if she might be frolicsome, as if she put on her dignity for the camera. The English woman seems born with it.

The Austrian is very lovely. As a general thing the face is childish, wistful, a little heavy in expression. Not a ring larks in the eyes, as in the case of the American. You know that true to the tenets of the Teutonic woman's education she could not flatly contradict her husband.

"Who buys these pictures?" I asked of the pretty girl behind the counter. "I don't mean the actresses. I mean the beauties of private life."

"Wealthy people from the west and south visiting New York make up collections of photographs—beauty albums and others of people with tragic or public histories. Among the latter you will find Mrs. Maybrick—here she is in mourning bonnet and veil—pretty Mrs. Botkin, of course, and always the beautiful and unfortunate Marie Vaysey, who met a tragic death with the Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria."

"What beauties are most popular?"

"The Duchess of Leinster, Miss Mertens of Vienna, Jane Hading—for besides being a great actress she is the most beautiful Frenchwoman. Mrs. Langtry still sells. Lillian Russell is always a favorite. Among other Americans who are very popular are Mrs. Cleveland, Lady Randolph Churchill and the young girl whose exquisite photographs bear the name of "Grace" and who is now Mrs. Raphael de la Mar.

"American beauties who belong to the Four Hundred and who are photographed, here seldom permit their pictures to be put on public sale."—KATE JORDAN.

A Briton In an American Home.

"How sensibly you Americans live," exclaimed a newly arrived Briton, determined to be complimentary cojte que coute, after he had greeted his hostess and taken a benevolent survey of her humble drawing room, quite shorn of its winter's glory and completely swathed, in brown holland. "Why, my wife's rooms are quite crowded. So full of ornaments and portieres and screens and knickknacks of all description. I think this way of furnishing so much more sensible."

"Oh," gasped the poor little mistress of the house, who prided herself upon her artistic arrangements. "It isn't always like this. You see, everything was put away and covered up after the season."

"Ah, have you a season in New York?" continued the affable visitor. This was the last straw, and the despairing hostess gave up all defense and submitted to be misunderstood.

"It was really too hot to wrestle with British denseness," she said afterward over her tea cup, "but what an idiot that man was!" The Englishman about the same time was writing home to his wife as follows: "The American women are pretty and clever certainly, but they have lots to learn about life in general and houses in particular. Such a desert of a place I dined in last night! It would have made you quite miserable to be obliged to call such a room a home."—New York Tribune.

Beating the Theaters.

"It seems to me," said the manager of one of the largest Broadway theaters, "that the free pass fiend is worse than ever this season. The very worse specimen came along to night. He had two young women with him and asked me in a very offhand manner for three good seats.

"Would you mind telling me who you are?" I asked.

"Why, certainly. My father is the head piano tuner in a factory."

"Well, if I had a bouncer two weeks ago," said another manager, "I would have made him earn his wages on a fellow that fooled me. This fellow was a big fine looking German, who told me that he represented several foreign papers and asked for three seats. I told him that I could hardly push the courtesies of the house so far, but that I would give him a seat for himself. I wrote on the back of his card 'one reserve.' He thanked me and went out to the lobby, and I forgot all about him.

[illegible] fixing up the receipts I was paralyzed to find that this fellow's card had gone for a box. He had put a 'd' on the 'reserve' and added 'box' in a very good imitation of my writing."—New York World.

Keeping Pets and Prisoners.

A singing mouse, which is not so great a rarity as one would suppose from the newspaper fuss that is sometimes made over one, has an added attraction as a pet. The singing is no doubt similar to that of the marmoset and resembles the canary song a good deal smothered.

These little creatures should be tamed, and attached to people by their affections, and not kept as prisoners in a cage. In the former case they display their peculiar characteristics and take perfect care of their coats, while in the latter they require constant watching and attention and show no individuality whatever. It is not a pet that is kept in a cage, it is a prisoner, and a prisoner in his unnatural and unhappy life can never afford much pleasure.—Harper's Bazar.

Mailing a Letter.

Did you ever see a woman post a letter? She will undertake to drop it into the box, then she draws it back and scans the direction, tries the stamp to see that it is on fast, scrutinizes the gummed side and runs her finger over it once or twice, then gives it one or two sudden jerks, which send it rapidly into the box. She then peeps in to see if it went through.—Exchange.

EARLY FALL STYLES.

CHARMING WOMAN HABITED IN A GRACEFUL NEGLIGEE.

A Clever Idea—Comfortable and Attractive Frocks—Nice Attire For Little Girls—A Very Handsome Model Fall Gown—Fine Turkish Trimming.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, July 23.—Perhaps a woman never looks more charming than when habited in a graceful negligee. By that I mean those baggy, loose, sleeveless, tight-gown shapes whose lines give a woman an almost elephantine proportions, but a neat, trim shape, fitting and outlining the figure and depending for its effect upon a well set back and gathered front fastened down under a ribbon which floating endwaysfloat so very much and dainty.

SLING SLEEVE SHOULDER ADORNMENTS.

One of the clever ideas in the way of such a gown was a medium colored jonge, with a piece of half inch wide manilla rope sewn into the skirt in "over and over" stitches, the loops just goes through being buttonholed firmly. This makes a very odd but effective trimming, and it is placed about four inches from the bottom, so that it appears to be trimmed from the outside. The neck is cut to come down to where the shoulders and neck join and straight across. The jonge is gathered at the neck, and from there it falls to the waist line, but across the breast are the flat rows of ribbon woven in the jonge. The ribbon is rush green. The sash silk is the same, with ribbon bit spangles sewn along irregularly.

The distinction of this negligee consists in the sling sleeves, which are made of Algerian silk in its barbaric stripes of color, in which green, yellow and pink predominate. In the back there is a watteau of the jonge silk, with a frosted manilla rope, forming a kind of bretelle, and with ends fringed out a quarter of a yard and intermingled with tufts of green, yellow and pink.

It seems that, as the few pitti gowns arrived from abroad prove, the bretelles are to be more exaggerated than ever. I saw one made of iridescent silk, blue and red, making a rich purple in its shade, and there were stiffened bretelles that stood out at least 18 inches from the neck to the widest part. The skirt was plain empire, with a ribbon ruffle at the knee and one at the bottom in the same shades, and nowhere did the skirt touch the ground, and it stood out like a bell.

A black silk warp henrietta had a plain tabor tunic, with a rich panting of the same elegant material. This shell plaiting is very fine, and when well made is one of the prettiest trimmings ever devised where neat work shows. There were three rows of the shell plaitings eight inches apart, bringing the upper one 21 inches from the bottom. The waist had enormous bretelles stiffened to stand out like wings, and in front one lapped over the other in Aldhu style and fastened under a rosette. The gigot sleeves were enormous at the top.

A very handsome gown was received last week by one of the large houses, and it is a model on which many others will be built. It was of pale heliotrope faille, with a deep flounce of white mousseline de soie, with a heading of the same, fastened by a double edge box plaiting of a darker shade of heliotrope. Around the waist and around the neck are other plaitings of the silk muslin. The upper sleeves are of shot surah, purple and gold, and there are double plaitings around the arms and around the neck, the latter being placed on the wide bertha, which is cut on a half circle, so that it falls into rich folds and to a jabot point.

EVE RETICENTS.

The Turkish women are adepts in making fine trimming. Some like beads; others like pears with leaves sewn in of the dress material or some other contrasting material. It is quilted up. They also make a trimming of black silk or dark blue that represents a flight of swallows, and this is set as a border upon the edges of their outer garments. I expect that some enterprising dressmaker will soon have the beading or other similar garniture made for fine dresses.

OLIVE HARPER.

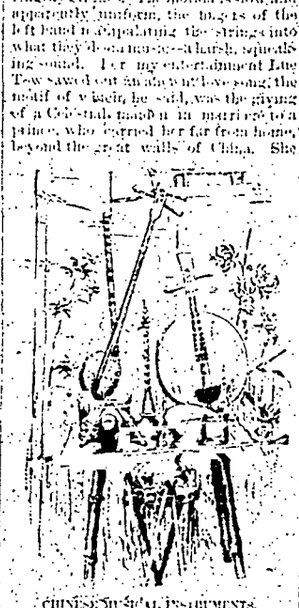
A CELESTIAL SONG.

Chinese Music and Melody—Wood, String and Brass Instruments.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 1.—"There are only five notes in our scale of music," said Lee Tow, a dealer in Chinese musical instruments. "We don't use the notes corresponding to the fourth and seventh in the American scale, and we claim that there are eight distinct sounds in nature. We have instruments to represent these sounds, but have only five notes. That may seem queer to you Americans, and we may naturally wonder why it is so. They are: The sounds of skin, of which we make the drum; cymbals are made of stone; bells, of metal; horns, of baked earth; flutes, of silk; violins, castanets and vibrating instruments, of wood; flutes, of bamboo and mouth organs, of the gourd. The sound of skin has eight notations, and we have a drum for each, with different kinds of bars, long or short or full, and some of them are struck with the right hand and drawn to the left and some with the left hand and drawn to the right.

Lee Tow took down a banjo and began a plunking tune which would have been a melody had not the two most natural notes been omitted. The drum of the banjo was of skin, soaked in pure water after being tanned, which gives it a sweet and mellow sound. The drum is about the size of a closed hand. The board is about 2 feet long, with two sinch keys at the end. The Chinese violin and guitar are noted for their large keys and small bridge, the reverse from the American instrument. The drum of the guitar is mounted on a turtle, which in some cases it is made to represent. They have musical instruments in the shape of various animals, birds, etc., and adorn them with carvings, silken tassels, ribbons and canopies of silk of all colors, designed to please the eye as well as the ears of their owners. The violin, which is about a foot and a half long, is played by placing the bow underneath the strings. There are no quick or lengthy strokes. The motion is slow and apparently uniform, the fingers of the left hand manipulating the strings into what they do not notes a harsh, squeaking sound. For my entertainment Lee Tow sawed out an American love song, the motif of which, he said, was the giving of a Celestial maiden in marriage to a prince, who carried her far from home, beyond the great walls of China. She became homesick, and thus expressed her grief. The words are lost enough, but on hearing the music I did not wonder at her illness:

My kinsfolk have given me away
Into a foreign land,
To the chieftain of the Cram.
He dwells in a miserable hut
Covered with skins.
His food is fish, and milk is his drink
Which I think is very hard.
Then I long to be a wild goose,
That I might fly away into my father's land.



CHINESE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

The musical notes are written in columns, and the words are written between the parallel columns and read from right to left, but this is an old time song so familiar to the listeners that neither music nor words are necessary, being picked up by all beginners like the "By, Baby, By" in the tree top.

The flute is made of bamboo, the most musical of all substances, and it serves as the "key," or "pitch," for the tuning of all other instruments. They are similar in make to our own flutes, only that the embouchure is in the middle instead of at the end. The successive sounds of their flute serve as the basis of their musical scale. The flute is bound with silk between the apertures, so as to preserve the wood from cracking, also to sweeten the sound.

The Chinese cymbals are not strictly cymbals, in that they are not clashed together, but struck with a drumstick as a drum. They are of various sizes, each having a different note, and are arranged on a frame, from 3 or 4 to 16 and played as we play a dulcimer. When one gets out of tune, a piece is chipped off the end or sliced off the back. These stones are valued according to their tone, which is given to them by exposure to the sun and the peculiar variations of the atmosphere in certain districts in China where they are found.

Another wooden instrument is a life size tiger in a crouching position. It is called the tiger, or on. It has 27 teeth sticking out of its back. It is stated by my informant that formerly the wooden teeth were melodious, and that by striking the tiger on the head he would pitch a tune, but during the last thousand years the art of making teeth with melody has been lost, and the practice is now to scrape the animal's back with a metal stick.

For more than 2,000 years the Chinese have known the fourth and seventh notes and must know that the insertion of these notes would complete the octave and render their music sweeter, yet they have refrained from using them. The only assigned reasons are that the two omitted notes are harder to sing and to remember, and with them five is a magical number to which everything conforms—the five points of the compass, east, north, south, west, center.

Linen.

Linen fabrics for summer costumes have come into such favor that "the stylish linen color" is an expression used in the shops to denote other materials with flax colored grounds in light gray and tan shades. Among the unbleached natural-tinted linens probably the most popular choice is smooth duck woven in tiny basket squares like hopsacking. Next this is a twilled linen or drilling of excellent body in ecru tints, sold for thirty-five cents a yard and thought worthy of trimmings of black moire or satin. The glazed linen or holland, when of very fine quality, makes excellent suits with a long coat and skirt to be worn with a stiff linen shirt front, or a soft shirt waist of silk or cheviot. At very exclusive houses importations of soft finished linen crash [illegible] not only in shades, but in much darker hues, as tan color, chestnut-brown, and modore. The so-called "art linens" made in Donegal, and used formerly for fancy work, are now sold at $1 a yard for dresses, not only in the stylish natural tints, but also in red, butchers' blue, green, and mustard color. The fancy is to trim these bright linens with white duck bands, revers, collar, etc., while black is used in the same way on the natural colored linen. Westing of heavier linen than that used for whole suits comes in basket weaving in tea green, ecru, or red with dashes, dots, lines or tiny square blocks of dark brown or black. The finest linen cambric is being fine tucked by children for sailor suits, and now made up for ladies' wadding and sea side morning suits in all the pretty bright stripes of pink, blue or bright red with white, and also in darker blue and brown. Dark blue denim, with hair-line stripes in faded linen, is called into requisition for coats and wide aprons are belted or high seats in ecru and brown shades, and in the clear white as well. Irish linen dresses, so long popular with the Princess of Wales and her daughters, are made with shirt waist, large sleeves and sailor collar, the skirt slightly gored, and the whole piped with belt ribbon.—Harper's Bazar.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

International Lesson for August 6, 1893—Paul at Ephesus—Acts 20:17-35.

(Special Arranged from Peloubet's Notes.)

[illegible]

TIME. Spring, A.D. 58. Paul arrived at Troas on Thursday, April 9. As the moon was about two days old, it was about two days after the full moon. He had spent seven days at Troas, preaching to the disciples, who came together on the first day of the week, and had spent a Lord's day with them. Paul was in a hurry to get to Jerusalem, if possible, by Pentecost, which was on the 15th of May. Ephesus was a celebrated city of Asia Minor, near the mouth of the Cayster, and was a great commercial center. It was the seat of the worship of Diana, and was famous for its magnificent temple, one of the seven wonders of the world. It was also famous for its theater, in which the riot described in Acts 19 took place. It was the seat of a Roman proconsul, and was a free city. It was the home of Apollos, Aquila and Priscilla, and was the place where Paul had spent two years before, teaching in the school of Tyrannus. It was the place to which Paul had promised to return if it was possible, and to which Timothy was now at work. It was the place to which Paul had written his first epistle to Timothy, and to which he had written his epistle to the Galatians. It was the place to which Paul had written his epistle to the Romans, and from which he had written his epistle to the Hebrews. It was the place to which Paul had written his epistle to the Corinthians, and from which he had written his epistle to the Philippians. It was the place to which Paul had written his epistle to the Colossians, and from which he had written his epistle to Philemon. It was the place to which Paul had written his epistle to the Ephes

M. WAGNER'S YOUTH.

One of the most striking movements in contemporary France is the formation of a new [illegible] among the young men of that country, especially among the University students, which has been founded by M. Charles Wagner. The genesis of this party, or, if it may be called it a party, is Mr. Wagner's book "La Jeunesse." This book, [illegible] extraordinary success in France. Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. have done well in getting it translated and publishing it in this country.

As everyone knows who reads French social life has been deteriorating for the past thirty years. The scientists, the materialists, the pessimists, the realists, have had everything their own way. Has there been a French novel published within this quarter century whose hero was a virtuous woman or one whose whole interest did not hinge on violation of the Seventh Commandment? As represented in the contemporary literature, the youth of France are hopeless, they are debauched, they have no ideals, no chastity, no virtue. This is what one reads and what we have produced. As M. Wagner says, beyond Zola there is nothing except stark nudity; progress in that direction is impossible.

It is against this state of affairs that our author has lifted up his voice and his pen. He assures the youth of France that the science of, the end of the century "is not all of truth, that materialism" is not real, that there are such things as spiritual verities, that you cannot measure virtue with a yardstick nor weigh honor and courage with a grocer's scales. He pleads for the ideal, for the whole of life as against its lower part only. And his pleading has not been in vain. The society of students which is founded to carry out his ideas and ideals numbers several thousands, and their influence is spreading. It is a tremendous task to try to reform, to regenerate a nation that has become as morbidly rotten at the top as the Paris of to-day, if the nation is to be reformed, reformation must begin at the beginning, and the beginning has seemingly made in the right place and in the right way.

To English and American readers the book does not and cannot appeal as it does to the youth of France. To understand the extraordinary influence it has exercised one must put himself at their point of view. It is almost entirely abstract and general. There is [illegible] a single concrete illustration in it. It is hard reading for an American, and we doubt whether it will have much influence upon American youth. Nevertheless it is worth reading to see what it is that has inspired anew in thousands of French youth a belief in ideality, in virtue and in religion. Whether the book appeals to us, especially or not, we must recognize the immense service it has rendered and is still rendering to France.

THE SIMPLE ADVENTURES OF A MEMSAHIB.

The title of Sara Jeanette Duncan's new book is significant. The word "simple" is an honest warning that no sensational or wildly exciting incidents are to be recorded in the experiences of Helen Frances Browne, of Peachey, and the word "Memsahib" is a foretaste of the Anglo-Indian flavor which is the chief characteristic of the book. As a picture of English life in India nothing better has appeared. The memsahib's adventures chiefly concern her servants, her tradesmen and her social acquaintances, but through them all there is a freshness and a charm in the author's style that prevents the commonplace from becoming the uninteresting, while a touch of delicate humor adds very considerably to the pleasure of the reader. A chapter that will not lack appreciation in the West is devoted to the tourist who believes, a few days sufficient to give him a complete insight into all the social and other conditions of life in a strange country, who eagerly believes all that is told him, and who is ready to write a book upon his return. The little plot which was fixed up for Mr. Batcham, M. P., for the purpose of manufacturing the evidence which he was so anxious to obtain, will find wide appreciation.

This book is published by D. Appleton & Co., and is one of the choicest specimens of the book maker's art that has recently come to our notice. The printing and binding are models of taste and comfort and the illustrations really illustrate as well as ornament the text.

AUGUST MAGAZINES.

The August number of Harper's Monthly gives first "The True Story of the Cock Lane Ghost," that curious delusion which in 1762 "crowded all the surrounding courts and alleyways about St. Paul's not only with its own motley masses, but with beaux and dames from the [illegible] and provoked the curiosity of preachers, writers and other intelligent men of that time." Whatever Mr. Thomas A. Janvier writes is worth reading, but to those of us who are interested in the history of any part of our country, the description of Greenwich village appeals to especially. It recalls stories that our grandmothers have told us of the days when it was a health resort for the families of the business men of New York, and some of them remember the daring deeds of the convicts in the prison at the foot of Tenth street. The region is especially deserving of attention because to-day, as Mr. Janvier points out, "From Fourteenth street down to Canal street, west of the meridian of Sixth avenue, distinctively is the American quarter of New York."

Richard Harding Davis gives us a character sketch in "His Bad Angel," and one of Herbert D. Ward's sketches of life on the shore tells us what was brought by "A Cast of the Net."

Mr. Howells furnishes a rather unsatisfactory "Scene," "Bride Roses." The descriptive articles on "Italian Gardens," "Riders of Tunis," "A Queer Little Family on the Bittersweet," "Blackwater and Shallows" are each entertaining in their line, as are the two remaining short stories, "A Landscape by Constable" and "At the Hermitage," and Susan Fenimore Cooper voices a "Lament for the Birds."

The Century gives generous installments of all the departments, and [illegible]

The Ladies' Home Journal has given [illegible]

"The Days of Yore," where the people of the cities take their only outing during the hot weather, watching the river people breathing the cool salt air, dancing, fishing and gathering strength for the past, [illegible] and stress.

The [illegible] is devoted to Robert Burns. Two or three poems and stories, bits for the workers, directions for ecclesiastical embroidery, and bits of life philosophy in Howells's novel round out the XXX. A prize poem, words and music, [illegible], and the travels of the poor "Brownies" in Germany and Switzerland.

Into chastity editorial the conclusion is reached that only by simplifying, by allowing a margin of health and strength in the daily work of our lives can we realize the beauty, the free dom from worry and nervousness so essential to the happiness and beauty of our American women. The pleasure of children in the country, the thrift little girls in the city schools and colleges, and the [illegible] of nature's mistress are [illegible] by Mrs. Lyman Abbott, [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] of this excellent home paper.

[illegible] story, an little [illegible] the plan of invited [illegible] to the [illegible] to the appropriate [illegible] and [illegible] illustrated in our public [illegible] and give the added interest of [illegible] association to our magnificent [illegible] for appreciating tourists.

"Alpine Days at Home" tells of life and methods of work. He incidentally advises any young people with literary aspirations to [illegible] their living in any way rather than [illegible] "If you have in you to write anything you will surely find time to do it."

A [illegible] and vigorous protest against the passionate novels of the day is Robert Buchanan's [illegible] at "The Dead Thing," ending with an appeal to those capable of chastened [illegible] to lend a hand [illegible]

"Thy [illegible]
"Thy [illegible]
"Thy [illegible]
"Thy [illegible]

To those who like to stay at home and read the travels of others the adventures of the party on the "Rhine" will give local color to more serious works. This month they reach St. Kitts, named for its discoverer, Christopher Columbus.

But by far the most entertaining series of articles is that on "My First Book" by a dozen famous writers, and which sound as though they had been "talked off" in a social hour.

The "Memoirs of a Female Nihilist" are as dramatic as usual and the story of "A Stained Ring" is an amusing one to read aloud.

The Idler's club discusses the overpopular subject of "Tipping," seeing no one against American travelers as [illegible] and concludes that it will do not with humanity.

The August number of the Colorado Magazine may be called most appropriately a "Columbian Number." Mr. William Pope, secretary of the committee having in charge the Religious Congress, which meets in Chicago in September, writes most entertainingly on "The Faith of the World," while Rabbi Edward N. Calisch, of Richmond, Va., himself a delegate to the Jewish Congress, gives a sketch of the learned men who will represent Judaism at the World's Fair, and takes occasion to emphasize the favorite dictum of the nineteenth century Israelites that Judaism is a belief and not in any sense a nationality. Mr. William Shaw Ward, late superintendent of the Colorado Mining Exhibit, speaks in defense of that display, showing that it is quality and not quantity that tells in these busy times. Mr. John Monteith writes entertainingly of Albrecht Durer, the "Neapolitan Romance" is finished, and Miss Hart's sketch of "A Few Hymn Writers" is as entertaining as a story. The article on "Colorado and its Resources," prepared under the supervision of Mr. C. S. Faurot, Superintendent Agricultural Department for Colorado, World's Columbian Exposition, is full of information for World's Fair readers, and, coming as it does after all the calamity howling of the past two weeks, will do much to convince our Eastern friends that Coloradans still have much for which to live, and that with such an abundance and variety of resources at her command the future of the Centennial State cannot be [illegible]

Lippincott's was one of the first of the magazines to adopt the custom of a complete novel of considerable length in each number, and the stories printed in this magazine include a number of works of fiction of importance. By no means the worst of these is "In the Midst of Alarms," which appears in the July number. It is written by Robert Barr (Luke Sharp), and is a well-planned and well-told account of the rather mild adventures of a New York reporter during his vacation visit to Canada. Annah (there is no law against the final "h") Robinson Watson has an illustrated article on Zachary Taylor, and Edith Edward or Eleanor? Leslie Gilliams writes entertainingly of William Rush, who lived nearly a hundred years ago, in Philadelphia, and of whom it was said, "He surpassed in acuity any ship carver in the world." The notable series of novelettes is continued by Valerie Hays Berry, whose story is entitled, "Jane's Holiday."

The long story in Godey's Magazine for July is "A Problem Unsolved," by W. J. Henderson. It is a story with a text, the sentence which serves that purpose being from Philip Gilbert Hamerton's "The Intellectual Life," as follows: "I believe that, for an intellectual man only two courses are open; either he ought to marry some simple, dutiful woman who will bear him children and see to the household matters, and bring him in a trustful spirit without jealousy of his occupations; or else, on the other hand, he ought to marry a highly intellectual woman, to carry her education far beyond school experiences, and willing to become a companion in the arduous paths of intellectual labor. The woman whom John Meadin marries is neither of these, and the results are [illegible] and [illegible]. The [illegible] of the story is not as natural as it might be, and the result, as suggested by the title, is inconclusive. Other articles of the number are "The Flower Markets of Paris," "Music at the Columbian Exposition," and a good short story, "Fidelia," by Lee McHardy. The number also contains two of the colored portraits which have been made a feature of Godey's.

The August number of Scribner's bears the inscription of "Fiction Number," and contains no less than six of those short stories which are the special delight of the desultory and languorous summer reader. These are "The House on the Hilltop," A Tale of Modern Etruria," by Grace Ellery Channing; "Beneath the Mask," by Howard Pyle; "Tomahawk to Tulip, Hoe," by H. C. Bunner; "Her Dying Words," by Thomas Bailey Aldrich; "The Flight of Betsey Lane," Sarah Orne Jewett; and "The Wedding Journey of Mr. Zaimee Green-Greenough," by William Henry Shelton. Differing widely in character, the relative merit of these stories is very largely a matter of taste, but for literary style and general excellence none surpass that of Mr. Aldrich. The fourth in the series on "Men's Occupations" is by Julian Ralph, who has special qualifications for treating "The Newspaper Correspondent." Mr. J. A. Mitchell contributes an illustrated article on "Types and People at the Fair."

BRIEF NOTICES.

A book that is of particular interest at this time is "The Silver Situation in the United States," by Professor F. W. Taussig of Harvard, published as No. 71 in Putnam's Questions of the Day series. Professor Taussig is a gold monometallist, but he presents the argument for bimetallism more fairly and fully than most economists of his school. People in this part of the country will not agree with him, and his answers to the bimetallist arguments do not seem to us to be at all conclusive. The book is perhaps worth reading as a dispassionate statement of the position occupied by the advocates of the gold standard. Those who are seeking really to inform themselves as to facts will find better statements elsewhere. One of the most valuable books we know of for facts on the silver question is Mr. Del Mar's Dana Horton's address, published by [illegible] & Co.

"For people in this part of the country, the current issue of Harper's Weekly is the most interesting that has appeared for a long time. There is a full page of illustrations of Cripple Creek mining camps, a portrait of Governor Waite, and articles upon the Governor and upon the situation in this State. Another finely illustrated article is on the Yellowstone Park, and there is a page of portraits of the leading men in the German Reichstag. Barring its editorials, for which we believe the managing editor is not responsible, Harper's Weekly was never better than it is under the present managing editor, Mr. Rufus Sinclair.

Harper's Bazar for July 29 contains "Little Paul P.," a farce, by Miss Grace L. Furniss, author of "A Box of Monkeys," and other popular plays for amateurs; a short story by Howard Seely, entitled "A Knight Errant of the Plains;" and the first of a short series of papers of great interest to art amateurs and decorators, entitled "The Elements of Floral Design," by [illegible]. This series will be abundantly illustrated.

LITERARY NOTES.

That literature and science in France tend to separate is the conviction of Joseph Reinach, a critical observer. "In fiction, for instance," he says, "the naturalism which was a glorification of science seems to be nearing its end. With the precise quasi-medical descriptions of maladies, physical and moral, with the physiology a la Claude Bernard, which M. Zola used to expound with zest—with all that dealt with the interior of things rather than of mind, we are disgusted, and we want something else. The psychologist, be it M. Bourget, or M. Prevost, or M. Margueritte, deals with feelings, deep-seated troubles, states of mind, which are to him the principal theme of the literary art. No doubt there creeps in a little positive science—even, it may be said, some psychology in their [illegible] but that enters into all the phenomena of mental life and into the composition of all our affections; and it is ceasing to be the aim and is becoming the means. Hence it happens that the ethic—or, to use a less pretentious word, the moral character—of literature is regaining importance. The most of our men of letters are writers with a thesis; even those who seem to sacrifice the least to the desire of proving a truth and the most wayward allow themselves to be impressed by the serious problems of the moment. In poetry, too, symbolism—efforts to express what young theorists call 'the mystery of thought'—is a sign of the general state of men's minds. It is the same with the historian, in the choice of subject, and with the character and part some assign to criticism. L'art pour l'art, le désintéressement intellectuel, are phrases that have had their day, as well as descriptions of gross realities. The object of our best writers appears to be to teach men what one of them calls le devoir présent et l'action morale."

A feature of the Midsummer Holiday Century will be a fully illustrated yachting article by W. P. Stephens, recounting the various contests for the "America's Cup." The yacht "America," which crossed the ocean in the summer of 1851, that won this cup which, in 1857, was made "a perpetual challenge cup for friendly competition between foreign countries." Mr. Stephens's article includes pictures from photographs of the best known American yachts, together with comparisons of old and new types.

Among the [illegible] articles of the year will be three papers written and illustrated by Edwin Lord Weeks, and describing the journey from the Black Sea to the Persian Gulf, on which Theodore Child lost his life. The first will appear in the October Harper's Magazine, and will be called "From Trebizond to Tabreez by Caravan." The text is made up from Mr. Weeks's diary and the illustrations printed from sketches, made on the spot, are unusually strong and expressive.

There are situations in Mr. Marion Crawford's novels which indicate a keen appreciation of dramatic effect on the part of the author. But this does not prove that Mr. Crawford can write a good play, and Mr. Daly's experiment with the novelist's drama will be watched with great interest. Much curiosity also has been expressed concerning Mr. Henry James's forthcoming play. The works which novelists prepare for the stage are apt to be painfully poor.

It is not usual for writers to illustrate their articles, nor, as a rule, are illustrators willing to put their pens in evidence with their brushes. Two exceptions appear in the August Harper's. Frederic Remington wrote as well as illustrated the account of his cance trip which is printed under the title "Black Water and Shallows," and William Hamilton Gibson is the author as well as the embellisher of "A Queer Little Family on the Bittersweet," a veranda study in natural history.

Mr. R. L. Stevenson's new novel, "Catriona," will probably not appear until the autumn, the author being engaged on extensive revisions. It is pleasant to learn, that with his forthcoming tale of the South Seas, to be called "Ebb Tide," his collaboration with Mr. Lloyd Osbourne in the production of fictions ceases. Mr. Stevenson will, we think, do better work alone.

"Who appreciates your books the more, men or women?" Sir William Fraser quotes himself as saying to Thackeray. "Women," was the answer of the novelist, "women and clever men."

M. Alphonse Daudet is seriously ill and can no longer appear in public.

Thackeray and the Men of To-Day.

"A gentleman by the name of Thackeray, who once wrote some books," defines a gentleman as "one having high aims." Judged by this standard, my grumpy friend, where are we? Most of us are absorbed in a desire to wear good clothes, to own horses or boats, to go to races and bet, to drink all the new combinations of abominable stuffs, to go to the opera and get up an affair with an actress girl. There are our high aims! —Heaven save the mark! I know of a man who the other night raised himself in a flowing silk and did a serpentine dance. Fancy it—a man! Truly this is the day of vaudeville. We find it a heedless man more interesting than Hamlet, and we prefer Tarra-ra-boom-de-ay to the tragedienne. Our pianos are loaded with concert hall classics of the "Daddy wouldn't buy me a Bow-wow" order. To have the honor of the acquaintance of one of the painted ladies of the ballet is to occupy a position of enviable distinction, and to be a real "stage door Johnnie" is better than to be the writer of many books. Dear Mr. Thackeray, you really must have been [illegible] high aims. We are quite sure we are all gentlemen, and you know you really couldn't call our aspirations and longings "high aims." Let me place you right. The true gentleman is he who wears the most swagger clothes, who talks in the most exaggerated way, who can drink and bet and swear, who can most recklessly squander his or somebody else's money, and whose intimate associates are the ladies of the chorus and the gentlemen of the turf. Oh yes, Mr. Thackeray, you were quite wrong; or else we are. Which?—[Harper's Bazar.

Walter Besant.

Mr. Walter Besant is one of the few men of the day who may fairly lay claim to a high degree of success in at least one different line of intellectual effort. As a novelist he is widely known on both sides of the Atlantic, and by no class better known or more kindly esteemed than by the readers of Harper's periodicals. As what may be called for want of a better term, a social reformer, his little crusade on that interesting and remarkable institution, "The People's Palace," which had its origin in his book, "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," Mr. Besant still being one of the trustees of the palace. For more than twenty years he has been an active and efficient worker in connection with the Palestine Exploration fund, of which organization he was for a long time the honorary secretary. In connection with Professor Palmer, as far back as 1871, he wrote a "History of Jerusalem," and has since been editor of the "Survey of Palestine," and one of the founders of the Palestine Pilgrims' society.

There is not space in this brief notice to trace in detail the peculiar and fruitful partnership between Mr. Besant and Mr. James Rice. It began almost by accident in 1871, and lasted for ten years, until the death of Mr. Rice in 1881. In all, there were some dozen novels written by them in this time, besides a number of short stories. Perhaps the most popular of the joint novels was "The Golden Butterfly," written for Edmund Yates's World in 1876. Since the death of Mr. Rice, Mr. Besant has attained a wide repute by the product of his own pen. The most known of his books are "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," and "The Children of Gideon," which related especially to the life of the poor in that urban nation, London. But "Dorothy Foster, a Tale of the Days of the Pretender," a historical novel, is a very strong work of a most trying type, in which the author's close study of the early days bears fruit. Mr. Besant is in the United States as a delegate to the Authors' Congress in Chicago, which meets July 10th, and is to prepare his views of the relations of authors and publishers—views that are very firmly held and vigorously advocated. His will previously visit New England. A novel by him, "The Rebel Queen," is now running in Harper's Bazar. [Harper's Weekly.

Education of Japanese Children.

The moral education of Japanese children is conducted partly at home and partly in school and is based largely upon the teachings of the history of the country. Intrepid valor, zeal, sobriety, discretion of speech, extreme courtesy, implicit obedience to parents and superiors and deferential reverence and regard for old age—these are among the chief characteristics looked for in boys, while industry, gentleness, faithfulness and cheerful deference are required of girls.—Popular Science Monthly.

PRO AND CON.

OPINIONS OF SENATOR JONES AND CONGRESSMAN HENDRIX.

Good Reading for Those Who Want to Hear Both Sides—"The Dollar of the Contract"—Two Opposite but Candid Views.

(Special Correspondence.)

THE SILVER SIDE.

NEW YORK, July 27.—I saw Senator J. P. Jones of Nevada the morning and asked him if in his opinion the purchasing clause of the so called Sherman bill is likely to be repealed during the coming special session. His answer was as follows:

"You are asking me a very hard question. What can we tell about the fate of the bill when all the powers of patronage are against us? Absolutely nothing. But if this yet may be, as the effort will remain unexhausted to prove the repeal. No pains will be left untaken in the work of frustrating the outrage that is proposed by the gold standard men of the east. No parliamentary expedient will be neglected. I do not like to speak of the strength of the silver men in the senate. If faith is kept I have reason to believe that the repeal of the bill will be stopped there. I have heard rumors, of course, to the effect that certain well known senators will desert us, and I have also heard the reason for their desertion mentioned. Until I cannot believe these rumors true. I will not mention the names of these senators, nor will I enter into details concerning the alleged reasons for their desertion of our cause."

"How do you think the southern Democrats will vote on the question of repeal?" was my next query.

"Again I must say," was his response, "that I cannot form an opinion in advance, but can you not see that we have them in very close quarters? How can the repeal of the Sherman bill be passed without the use of what is known as the cloture? It cannot, and they know it, and they dare not vote to apply it to us, because in the past when they have fought against its application they have called on the silver men for cooperation, and we have helped them." And the senator's eyes sparkled and his cheeks flushed with excitement.

"Are you among those who believe that the clause demonetizing silver in the law of 1873 was inserted surreptitiously?" was my next question.

"I would hardly like to say that," was his reply, "but this much I will say—that, although the change may have been read by every one at the time, for all I know, yet I am satisfied that very few congressmen understood what the clause meant, and I think that Senator Sherman himself failed to comprehend its far reaching effects."

"Do you think, senator, that the purchase of silver as authorized by the so called Sherman law is at the bottom of the present state of distress?"

"No, sir," was the response. "But I want you to emphasize the fact, although it is already known to best fact by all intelligent newspaper readers, that the silver purchasing law is not what was demanded by the silver men. What we wanted then, as all the world knows, and what we would prefer now is free coinage of silver. We have not the slightest objection to the repeal of the silver purchasing law, provided something that will give silver a fair show is put into its place. But the real cause of the present monetary stringency ought to be, it seems to me, plain to every intelligent mind. The term monetary stringency itself tells the story. The trouble is we have not enough money in the United States to do the business of the United States. The population has increased a certain percentage within the past 10 years, but the amount of money put in circulation by the United States government during that time has not increased in anything like the [illegible] You are coming now and is the matter in your case—you are short of money. I am short of money, Smith and Brown and Johnson and everybody else is short of money. We toil and sweat and struggle to get enough money to carry us through today, and we go to bed at night somewhat relieved because we have got through today, but in the morning we awake to find that we are again short of money and have to go through the same agonizing experience again, and so on indefinitely. Now, I am one of those who hold that the government can make money out of anything. It does make money out of paper, and unless you are dead broke you will have some of that paper made money in your pocket now. You much prefer that paper money to coin, either gold or silver, for it is more convenient to carry. But the single standard man will say, this paper money is redeemable in coin. To be sure it is, but I do not see why it should not be made redeemable in anything or everything—wheat, corn or other valuable commodity—and, as everybody knows, I believe that fiat money pure and simple would answer every purpose for which money is made, without any coin reserve of any kind, but we do not ask that. We ask simply that the faith of the nation, which was pledged when the government authorized the stamping of this paper money with the words redeemable in coin, be kept inviolate. This is the dollar of the contract, and for it we will fight during the extraordinary session of congress that President Cleveland has called. This is the dollar you agreed to pay when you contracted your debts. This is the dollar you should be allowed to pay. But if in obedience to the mandate of the European powers, backed up by the action of the British government in suspending the coinage of silver in India, the United States is constrained to adopt a single gold standard every debtor in the United States will be forced to pay with dollars that are worth more wheat and that cost more worry and sweat and toil to get than those he agreed to pay with—the dollar of the contract."

THE GOLD SIDE.

Hon. Joseph C. Hendrix, member of the Fifty-third congress and president of the National Union bank of New York, of which E. O. Leech, late director of the United States mint, is cashier, makes the following statement:

"The struggle of the silver mine owners and those who are in various ways interested in the product to compel the government to keep in the market as a forced buyer of the white metal is a selfish struggle. It strongly resembles in its features the imperious demands of the old proslavery party. Extravagant language is used, wild threats are made, and there is a general kickup that bodes no good for a speedy settlement of the important financial question now before this country. Every time any interest has to be disentangled from governmental favoritism the same fuss is made, but in the long run the general welfare of the people, never, is the supreme law. The Sherman law has now no friend to do it honor.

"It has hatched so many evils in addition to the brood of the Bland bill that every one has a broom raised to hit at it. Our silver friends jump on it with vigor at the same time that they cry for free coinage of silver. Now no one who thinks about the matter much pretends that the Sherman law is responsible for all of the present ills, and while it might be interesting it is perhaps not pertinent to attempt by analysis to search out [illegible] wide. They affect [illegible] continents and islands of the sea. They follow the Anglo-Saxon race around the globe as some disease follows the people.

"We might have pulled through all of the adverse currents, but for the distrust of our business [illegible] Europe [illegible] to pay us for our own debts, and we have lost its custom for our securities. The fear that we were going to pay back their money in depreciated currency [illegible] Australia [illegible] of our expected position to draw gold enough sold to help her out upon a gold [illegible] as to increase our own gold obligations under the Sherman law, instead in payment for silver bars. We received these bars at one end of the treasury, paid legal tender dollars for them at the rate of $4,500,000 a month, and these notes were at once handed in at the other end of the treasury with a demand for gold for export.

"The United States was caught in a trap. Its gold was displaced by silver so fast that its reserve of $100,000,000 around which a circle of superstitious reverence had been drawn in the public mind was encroached upon, and then the process of contraction, of waning confidence, of distrust of the future, began at home. The early birds caught the profits and got out of the markets. Liquidation followed. A cold wave went rapidly from New York to San Francisco and left broken banks and ruined firms to marks its course. The treasury department was as helpless as a Hindoo idol before a pestilence. Its big stock of silver could not be sold. There was no law for that. It was useless as an asset. It could not be used to relieve anything or anybody. Every day our gold was being drained away. Hoarding began and I continued.

"We weathered the dangerous breakland created by the July interest payments by the help of the financial device of clearing house certificates, and we had one ray of moment of hope in anticipation of the special session of congress called to relieve an anxious and distressed nation. The country had appearently responded. It was ready seemingly to resume and to insist upon a repeal of a law at once so vicious and so treacherous.

"Now our silver friends, not at all sorry for the ills that have come from a compulsory purchase of their product, insist that if we want to buy it we shall coin it into dollars—make it legal tender for all debts—force it into the hands of labor. Note the cries of prophecy in the world for the right to make such a demand of a government. They say that there has been a conspiracy against silver. Three times our country has asked of the world to confer about making some use of silver in the currency. We have failed every time.

"India, our great ally, has withdrawn from the hopeless effort to sustain silver, and we are left alone nursing our idol. Yet we are asked to keep up the role of Stay lung at tremendous loss to our property. It is a foolish proposition. We must take our position along with other nations—ready to adopt bimetallism when they are ready, but determined to keep our credit with them all and to keep active the factors of prosperity which we can rely upon to place us in the front rank. There is no use of talking compromise. That is a device always full of mischief. We must use the money that the world uses.

"Just as soon as we get upon solid ground in our finances and the rest of mankind understand that we mean earnest, we will flourish like we ought to do. [illegible] What is the matter in your case—you are short of money. I am short of money, Smith and Brown and Johnson and everybody else is short of money. We toil and sweat and struggle to get enough money to carry us through today, and we go to bed at night somewhat relieved because we have got through today, but in the morning we awake to find that we are again short of money and have to go through the same agonizing experience again, and so on indefinitely. PHASES OF GOLD MINING.

Reworking Abandoned Claims—A Device to Frustrate Robbers.

(Special Correspondence.)

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Old gold miners are greatly interested in the recent development arising the old mines of the Mounta district. At the bottom of the shaft of the Center mine, which has just been cleaned out, a body of ore 14 feet in width and assaying $18 to the ton has been uncovered, and it is stated that the old Smith and Clay mine, which yielded remarkably well years and years ago, is also about to be reworked by capitalists who have recently bought the abandoned claim for what may be spoken of as a mere song.

When the modern stamping mills and amalgamation apparatus were perfected, certain prospectors had the tailings or that had been thrown aside as of too low a grade for possible reduction—assayed and found that they would yield about $20 a ton. This was brought to the attention of Senator Fair, and the mine was purchased by him, the latest machinery set up and the tailings worked over. The profit realized was very great.

It was at the Buchanan mine that the Well-Fargo Express company put into service a device for transporting the product of the mine after it had been reduced to Sonora, where it was taken by the stage line, in such a way as to effectually frustrate the designs of those who would suddenly become rich by robbing the gold wagon.

These robberies were of course always from the express company and not from the mining company, for the former always gave the latter upon receiving a consignment of gold for Sonora an express receipt, which was as good as a certified check, for the value of the gold transported. It seemed for a time that no amount of vigilance could prevent the robbing of the wagon, but at last a bright driver suggested that the little gold bricks be cast with two holes running through each of them. A skeleton wagon with a steel frame was then constructed.

Just back of the driver's seat was securely fastened a small chilled steel safe, fitted with a combination lock. Through the safe ran two steel bolts, and when the gold was put into the strongbox these bolts were passed through the holes in the bricks. Then the whole was screwed securely to the bottom of the safe, and, by an ingenious contrivance the nuts were afterward locked on. If robbers had succeeded in overpowering the guard of six armed men, who always came with the wagon, they would then have had to break the safe open and break the bolts off before getting the gold. As the exact time the wagon left the works was always known at Sonora, the delay that would [illegible] robs in getting at the gold would have caused alarm but at Sonora and the works, and there would have been plenty of time for help to arrive early enough to prevent the bandits' success.

Although the stage from Sonora was afterward robbed of treasure, there were no robberies between the Buchanan mine and Sonora after the device I have described was put into operation. S. D. G.

FINANCE AND TARIFF.

VIEWS OF VOORHEES AND CATCHINGS ON THE COMING CONGRESS.

Two Acknowledged Leaders Interviewed. Prospect of a Year's Session—Unconditional Repeal of the Sherman Law Uncertain—The Tariff and Question of Revenue.

(Special Correspondence.)

WASHINGTON, July 24.—Hunter Wallace Voorhees of Indiana this year will have the most important and responsible position in the senate. As chairman of the finance committee he will have the greatest opportunity of a long life for acquiring fame, as I have said, a lasting honorable one, but in this congress it will be more so than ever. The silver question, all tariff and income bills and the tariff—all are committed to the custody of the committee on finance. In its single self the finance committee embraces jurisdiction of measures which by the house are distributed among three committees, each of which is highly regarded—namely the committees on ways and means, coinage, weights and measures and banking and currency.

Will Senator Voorhees come up to the full measure of his opportunities? I cannot answer; time must be permitted to tell, for though the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" is undoubtedly great in some directions—as an advocate before a jury, for instance—he has never been put to the test upon to be applied. It requires different talents than those of eloquent pleading, defense and attack, called a lighter and fraught with importance to business interests as financial and tariff reform. The senator has experience in public affairs, much knowledge and eloquence on his side, but hitherto he has been regarded rather lightly as a man of detail, and now he will be battled by such silver advocates as Jones and Teller, and in tariff matters by men like Aldrich, Sherman and Morrill, of whom the Indiana lawyer is a specialist in the business details of the tariff and customs laws.

However he may come out of this ordeal, the very position he holds makes the senator's views on the coming changes important. Senator Voorhees has been imbued with the silver and soft money views of his state and according to current report he was at odds with President Cleveland learned that he could reckon on the support of the chairman of the finance committee that he decided to call on him together in August. I talked with the senator in the Pennsylvania depot the other day on the [illegible] and he gave permission to use his words. "Congress will be called in August, and I think it will be [illegible] to do. The sherman law will be repealed. He [illegible] I believe, [illegible] and there is no doubt [illegible] the opponents of repeal will do [illegible] in their power to make it an [illegible] some time."

"You have been [illegible] as a free coinage man, senator?"

"I have been [illegible] a lot of my silver proclivities, but there is no reason why that should stop me or any other silver Democrat from voting to repeal the Sherman law at once. I have never believed in it, voted against it, and so did all the other Democrats, and its workings have given us all the more reason to flow vote for repeal. We told Jones, Stewart and the other silver men at the time that it would hurt silver and would [illegible] against it. The danger now is that we may go too far and that financial legislation may swing the other way. We must restore public confidence and then afterward go to work to provide more circulation, but that will take time. The party is committed to a revision of the tariff, and the people expect it to give them relief from their present burdensome taxes. How long it will take to get the tariff all out of the way no man can tell, but this and other things that will come up make me look for a continuous session of congress to last a year or longer."

Having obtained this authoritative statement from the senate leader, I sought the house view of affairs. The closest man to the speaker and his representative in many missions is General Catchings of Mississippi, a practical man of affairs. Under the shade of a tree in front of his home in the fashionable Dupont circle section of the west end he gave me his views.

"No one can do more than conjecture how long or how continuously congress is likely to be in session until members get here and there is an opportunity to learn their temper. Personally I don't think it will take long to repeal the Sherman law. We can get through with it in the house without unusual debate, and I believe they can in the senate also. Of course it must be discussed for some time, but unless the silver men make an ugly fight—and by ugly I mean resort to all sorts of obstructive tactics—it ought not to be long before the country knows where we stand on the Sherman law.

"Under our rules we can get a vote in the house, and though there is nothing to stop senators talking forever I do not believe filibustering can be long carried on. I have never seen prolonged filibustering that did not have a great public sentiment behind it, such as there was behind the force bill. And I take it the whole country almost will be against filibustering over silver. I don't mean, mind you, to say that everybody is for the repeal of the Sherman law, but that the [illegible] country are in such a condition that, whether for or against silver, the people will demand that the Sherman law be voted up or down, so we will know where we stand. A long agony of suspense won't be tolerated.

"It's too early to say whether or not there will be an unconditional repeal, but my judgment is we should repeal the law and then wait awhile. In the state of the public mind congress could not take a comprehensive view of the finances. It's a bad thing to tinker with the currency. We have been doing nothing but tinkering for some time and ought to stop.

"Will congress adjourn after getting through with the Sherman bill?"

"I think we might if it did not take long. You see the committees would all be appointed and could go to work. The session, though, may last some little time, and then congress would want to run right along. I don't think much of the New York suggestion to appoint a commission to revise the finances. No good comes of commissions. Congress is enough of a commission when the public mind quicks and it gets ready.

"Yes, I think we can revise the whole tariff and raise revenue for the government. We ought to be able to give relief [illegible] to the poor and to the farmer. Oh, yes, we can raise money by an increased whisky tax," laughingly. "There will be no trouble about getting revenue; we will get it somehow." BYRNES RICHARDSON.

Tennis Champion T. A. Driscoll.

Thomas A. Driscoll is now tennis champion of the Pacific coast. He belongs to the Oakland (Cal.) Tennis club and won the coveted honor at the recent annual tournament. W. H. Taylor, Jr., who had captured the championship six successive years, did not defend his title, and Driscoll experienced comparatively little difficulty in defeating a good field of rivals. The double championship will be played for in September, and Driscoll and his friend, Charles B. Bates, Jr., will endeavor to win the event. Driscoll is an enthusiastic player, and trained carefully for his recent match. He practiced every night for three weeks, with the result that from the very opening of the tournament he displayed championship form.

His grit and endurance attracted most favorable comment, and his serving and all around play were of a high order. Among Driscoll's most formidable opponents were Harry Stevens, George H. Ira, W. E. Allen, C. B. Bates, Jr., Samuel and Truman Hardy, and Tobey Allen. By his victory Driscoll is the challenger for the cup, and the Pacific coast champion says he is in tennis to stay and declares that he will defend his title as long as he holds it. Although Driscoll is a player of unquestioned strength, many tennis judges are of the opinion that he would be unable to defeat such a skillful and seasoned wonder as ex-Champion Taylor. As the men have never met however, this belief is merely founded upon supposition.

OARSMEN AFTER FAME.

Busy Weeks for the World's Swift Scullers.

The annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen will be held at Detroit on Aug. 9 and 10; the American Canoe association meet at Kingston, Ont., Aug. 11; the international regatta, under the auspices of the Chicago navy, will be held at Lake Geneva, Illinois, Aug. 11-12, and

J. W. BERGEN. WILLIAM CAFFREY.

T. W. HIGGINS.

Jacob Gaudaur and James Stansbury will row for $5,000 and the championship of the world on Lake Quinsigamond, Massachusetts, Aug. 15. The month of August consequently will be a notable one to those interested in aquatics.

The course over which the Detroit races will be rowed is opposite Belle Isle and is said to be one of the finest stretches of water for rowing purposes in the United States. In addition to the regular annual events scheduled by the N. A. A. O. there seems to be a fair possibility that the Cornell varsity crew and the Cambridge (England) eight may struggle for supremacy. The Cambridge crew was this year beaten by Oxford and is consequently anxious to try a contest to retrieve its fortunes. The Cornell eight recently defeated the University of Pennsylvania and is rowing in very good form this year. As Cambridge does not represent the English championship she will probably not send her crew to America.

At one time there was hope that the champion Oxford crew would visit the United States or that Yale would flash her famous blue on England's Thames, but although an enterprising American citizen went so far as to offer to pay the expenses of either Oxford or Yale on a foreign trip neither crew could be induced to tempt outrageous fortune in strange waters. This decision was a great disappointment to lovers of rowing on both sides of the Atlantic. The coming regatta at Detroit will be the twenty-first in the history of the N. A. A. O. and will be open to amateur rowing clubs of the world. There are nine events on the programme—single scull races, double scull shells, pair oared shells, four oared shells, single scull shells, junior four oared shells, junior eight oared shells, intermediate eight oared shells and a special international race.

Among the prominent oarsmen who will probably compete for the single scull championship are William Caffrey of Lawrence, Mass., who was national champion in 1889 and 1891, Joseph W. Bergen of Boston, winner of the quarter mile national championship in 1891, and Thomas W. Higgins, the noted Worcester (Mass.) sculler, who has defeated both Caffrey and Bergen. The present senior single scull champion is J. J. Ryan of Canada; P. Lehaney of Albany is junior single scull champion, and the New York Athletic club's crew is senior eight oared sculling champion of the United States.

Immediately following the international races of the N. A. A. O. will be the silver anniversary or twenty-fifth annual regatta of the Northwestern Amateur Rowing association on Aug. 11 and 12.

THE FOX SINGLE SCULLER.

The Chicago navy's international regatta promises to rival the Detroit affair in importance. About 1,500 oarsmen representing different sections of America and several foreign countries are expected to compete. The races will be held on Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, 70 miles from Chicago, where a grand stand with seating capacity for 20,000 people has been erected opposite the course. Prizes valued at over $5,000 will be contested for, and races for the amateur championship in various branches of rowing will be features of the regatta.

Professional rowing is at rather a low ebb in America at present, but there is considerable interest in the three mile race between Stansbury and Gaudaur Aug. 15 for the reason that Gaudaur will attempt to wrest from the Australian oarsman his title of champion single sculler of the world. James Stansbury won the championship in 1890 after the death of Champion Henry Searle. The late William O'Connor, single scull champion of America in 1885, vice Reel Australia and rowed Stansbury for the vacant title, but was beaten. Stansbury has been in America several months and has already been defeated by Gaudaur in a race between several crack oarsmen. Jacob Gaudaur was single scull champion of America in 1884 and early in 1887, when he defeated John Teemer and Edward Hanlan respectively. In July, 1887, however, Hanlan turned the tables on Gaudaur, and in October Teemer also outrowed the Canadian.

Gaudaur and his young partner, John McKay, won the double sculls championship in 1888 by defeating Teemer and Hanlan, but were in turn worsted by Hanlan and O'Connor in 1891. Last year Gaudaur and Hosmer won the double sculls championship by outrowing Hanlan and O'Connor.

Richard K. Fox is endeavoring to infuse new life into the [illegible] rowing, and for this purpose he has offered the Fox cup for single sculls—a silver trophy which cost $1,200 and is over 2 feet in height. The cup is to represent the championship of the world and becomes the property of any oarsman who holds it for three years against all comers, to be won three times in succession. The deed of gift provides that all races must be five miles, within town, in American waters, and for a purse of $1,000 a side—and that the holder of the trophy must accept all bona fide challenges within 90 days or forfeit his claim to the cup. It is expected that the leading single sculls of the world—Gaudaur, Stansbury, Hanlan, Hosmer and others—will row for the trophy at Chicago during August.

MALCOLM MONTMORE.

Two Clever Dogs That Box.

The leaping kangaroos, lions and stallions that have been amusing the public for a year past have been followed by a pair of boxing dogs named Dixie and Bob. Dixie is a poodle, Bob is a terrier, and both are owned by Edward Martin, a San Francisco dog trainer. The dogs lace their gloves tied on as they sit erect in chairs in their rooms, and at the call of time they rush into the center of the ring with their paws up in true pugilistic style.

When hostilities open, they seem lively blows and strike exclusively at the nose. They seem to enjoy the sport, and as there are no knockouts the dog that displays the most science gets the division at the end of the bout.

AMONG THE ATHLETES.

Harry Jewett of the Detroit Athletic club will defend his title as amateur champion sprinter of the United States and Canada this fall. Jewett holds the 100 yards and one furlong championships of both countries.

G. W. Orton, the young Canadian runner, holds the American championship in the mile run.

F. C. Puffer, a tall, painfully slender young New Yorker, is still world's champion hurdle racer at 120 yards. His time is 15-2-5 seconds. He also possesses the American championship at 120 and 220 yards.

The dates for the World's fair championships of the Amateur Athletic union are Sept. 14, 15 and 16.

The palatial clubhouse of the defunct Manhattan Athletic club in New York, which cost over $1,000,000, recently sold for $450,000.

Willie Day, the great distance runner, is training for the five mile and cross country senior individual championships at Chicago. T. P. Conneff will probably be one of his opponents.

The Southern League's New President.

James B. Nicklin, the new president of the Southern league, is a resident of Chattanooga and is one of the leading business men of that city. He is a banker and is consequently well qualified for the arduous work of directing the business end of the league's affairs. For two years past Mr. Nicklin has been president of the Chattanooga baseball club and has considerable reputation as a Mason and secretary man in the historicity he makes [illegible] league of which he is president seems to have enjoyed a prosperous season this year and has won for itself a prominent place in the local history of the national game.

JAMES B. NICKLIN.

In personal appearance President Nicklin is said to closely resemble President Nick Young of the National League and American association. If [illegible] President Mr. Young's talent as a baseball magnate, the Southern league is to be congratulated in having secured his services.

An Advertising Dodge.

The latest advertising scheme has been practiced in the city this week by a young man of push and ingenuity. He rings a doorbell, and when the door is opened unceremoniously pushes himself in and asks for the lady of the house, opening the conversation in this fashion, "If you are not at dinner, I would like to talk with you." When asked upon what subject he prefers to talk, he gravely replies, "I have come to make your acquaintance. I am a dentist and shall be glad to secure your patronage." At last accounts he found, but few Springfield women who enjoyed the leisure necessary for pursuit of so extended acquaintanceship.—Springfield Graphic.

A Fine House Cat.

From The Pioneer Mail we learn that Mrs. J. S. Mackay has a tiger snow leopard at Kulu, in the Punjab. Though the animal is nearly full grown, he is practically free and lies about the house all day like a large cat or fowls with his mistress. His ultimate destination is the Zoological gardens of London. Should he be brought over alive he will be the only animal of his kind in Europe.—London Nature.

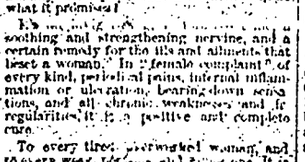
Nature's Wise Provision.

Husband—Do you know that every time a woman gets angry she adds a new wrinkle to her face?

Wife—No. I did not, but if it is so I presume it is wise provision of nature to let the world know what sort of a husband a woman has.—Exchange.

Making Rash Wagers.

A Chester man made a bet of £50 that he could find six women in that city who would marry him, and he won it. Now he's ready to give £50 to any lady who will show him a way to get out of his engagements.—London Tit-Bits.



IT ISN'T IN THE ORDINARY WAY that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the weak and suffering woman who fools it. It's guaranteed. Not with words merely any medicine can make claims and promises. What is done with the "Favorite Prescription" is this: if it fails to benefit or cure, in any case, your money is returned. Can you ask any better proof that a medicine will do what it promises?

It's [illegible] and strengthening nervine, and a certain remedy for the ills and ailments that beset a woman. In "female complaint" of every kind, periodical pains, internal inflammation or ulceration, bearing-down sensations, and all chronic weaknesses and irregularities, it is a positive and complete cure.

To every three sickly, worn-out woman, and to every weak, [illegible] and ailing one, it is guaranteed to bring health and strength.
